COX WINS IN THE BUCKEYE STATE

DAYTON MAN HEADING DEMOCRATIC TICKET IS ELECTED BY LARGE PLURALITY.

BIG VOTE IN ALL COUNTIES

Day Passes Without Incident of Note at Any Point, Report of Disturbances Being Few and Far Between.

Columbus, O.—Woodrow Wilson for president and James M. Cox for governor swept Ohio.

Cox was elected by a clear majority over the vote cast for Arthur L. Garford, Progressive, and Gen. R. B. Brown, Republican. The vote for Cox ran far ahead of that cast for Wilson for president, although it appears that Wilson has carried the state by over 100,000.

The Cox majority may reach the unprecedented plurality of 200,000. He will have the largest plurality ever given a candidate for governor in the state.

Indications are that President Taft has run second in Ohio, Roosevelt, according to latest returns, showed surprising weakness in the state. President Taft ran far ahead of the colonel in the southern part of Ohio and Roosevelt did not poll the vote expected in the northern end of the state.

The returns indicate that the Republicans of Ohio rejected the Roosevelt proposition—that of abandoning the Republican party.

The result of the election has given Ohio governmental affairs wholly to the Democrats. The entire Democratic state ticket has been carried to victory in a notable manner. Nearly all the counties heard from have been carried by the Democrats. The legislature in both branches will be in control of the Democrats and the party managers are claiming the election of 19 Democratic congressmen with the result of the other two districts in doubt.

County after county that has been in the Republican column for generations has been turned over to the Democrats. The defeat of the Republican state organization has been complete, although it apparently has saved for itself the second place in the state.

SULZER IS CHOSEN GOVERNOR OF N. Y.

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE'S PLURALITY MAY BE GREATER THAN WILSON.

PENNSYLVANIA FOR COLONEL

Keystone State Holds True to Cause of Roosevelt — Vote for Taft Smaller Than That of New Jersey Man.

William Sulzer for the governorship may have an even greater plurality than Wilson's.

Wilson's plurality over Taft above the Bronx is at least 23,000. In New York City it is quite 163,000 over Taft and 123,000 over Roosevelt, who ran second below the Bronx. Sulzer's plurality over Hedges in the interior will exceed that of Wilson over Taft by many thousands.

In the city Sulzer beat Straus by more than 120,000.

The new legislature will be Democratic in both branches by a heavier majority than that of two years ago. Then the Democrats controlled 116 of the 200 senators and assemblymen.

WILLIAM SULZER.

Philadelphia—A plurality of more than 23,000 for Theodore Roosevelt in Pennsylvania is indicated by latest returns. Philadelphia gave President Taft a plurality of about 13,000 with Roosevelt running second, 14,000 ahead of Wilson. Gov. Wilson ran second in the state outside of Philadelphia.

The Republican state candidates were also elected. They are Robert K. Young for state treasurer, and A. W. Powell for auditor general.

Sixteen Republicans are elected to the national house, the four Republican nominees for congressman-at-large also winning, while the Democrats apparently have won in 15 districts.

In the districts outside of Allegheny county, the returns indicate the election of the following state senators:

First—Edwin H. Vare (R.)
Third—James P. McNichol (R.)
Fourth—John Sheats (R.-K.)
Fifth—William H. Keyser (R.)
Seventh—Augustus F. Daix, Jr., (R.)

Bryan Congratulates.

Lincoln.—William J. Bryan sent the following telegram to Gov. Wilson:

"I most heartily congratulate you and the country upon your election. Your splendid campaign has borne fruit in a great victory. I am sure your administration will prove a blessing to the nation and a source of strength to our party."

Gets Cuffs Instead of Embrace.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—When 16-year-old Michael De Stefano, who had run away from home to avoid the anger of his employer, Fred C. Williams, with whose wife he had been surprised in a local hotel, returned to the parental roof, he received not an embrace, but a sound cuffing at the hands of his father, who was convinced of the boy's duplicity. Mrs. Williams is believed to be in Schenectady at the home of her mother, where she is thought to have fled when she was found with young DeStefano.

One Killed as Trains Crash.

Topeka, Ind.—One man was instantly killed, another perhaps fatally hurt, and a score of passengers shaken up four and a half miles east of here, when the Wabash limited, westbound, collided head-on with a freight train.

Village Elects First Mayor.

Akron, O.—L. M. Dalrymple has just been elected the first mayor of Northfield, recently incorporated as a village in Summit county. Dalrymple [illegible] W. W. Darby, received [illegible]

TEDDY CONGRATULATES WILSON

Oyster Bay, N. Y.—Colonel Roosevelt sent the following telegram to Gov. Wilson when it became evident from the returns that the latter had been elected president:

"The American people by a great plurality have conferred upon you the highest honor within their gift. I congratulate you thereon."

When the private telegraph wire leading into a room on the second floor of Col. Theodore Roosevelt's home told him that he had been overwhelmingly defeated he made the following statement:

"The American people by a great plurality have decided in favor of Mr. Wilson and the Democratic party. Like all good citizens, I accept the result with entire good humor and contentment. As for the Progressive cause, I can only repeat what I have already so many times said: the fate of the leader for the time being is of little consequence, but the cause itself must in the end triumph, for its triumph is essential to the well being of the American people."

Confessed Slayer Is Sentenced.

New York City.—"Red Phil" Davidson, confessed murderer of the gang leader, "Big Jack" Zelig, was sentenced by Justice Goff in the criminal branch of the supreme court to imprisonment in Sing Sing for not less than 20 years nor more than life.

"Red Phil" shot Zelig on a street car on Oct. 5, asserting then that the gangster had robbed him of $500, though the district attorney's office believed that Zelig had been put out of the way so that he could not testify against Becker.

Women Win in Four States.

New York City.—"Woman suffrage has carried in four of the five states in which the question was put to a ballot," Dr. Anna Shaw, president of the national Woman Suffrage Association of America, declared. "Women will have the vote in Michigan, Oregon, Arizona and Kansas, making a total of ten states in all.

"Before Nov. 5 women could vote in six votes, which have a total of 37 electoral votes, as follows: California 13; Colorado 6; Washington 7; Idaho 4; Utah 4; Wyoming 3.

Says Hospital Not a Jag Cure.

Massillon, O.—The Massillon state hospital is just now more overcrowded than any other institution for the insane in Ohio, according to Superintendent H. C. Eyman. "There are now more than 100 more patients at the institution than it can conveniently accommodate," said he. "This is in spite of the fact that we permit no voluntary commitments of inebriates. A state hospital for the insane should not be a jag cure. If an inebriate is regularly committed here as insane, he is treated as well."

Claims Tuberculosis Cure.

Berlin.—At a meeting of the Berlin Medical Society here, Dr. Friederich F. Friedmann announced the discovery of what he believed to be a practical cure for every form of tuberculosis. He exhibited cured patients and declared he had treated 682 cases by his method with invariable improvement and almost invariably complete cures. Prominent physicians testified to success by this method in their own practice. Dr. Friedmann injects living tubercle bacilli which have [illegible]

TAFT GIVES OUT STATEMENT

Cincinnati, O.—Admitting the defeat of himself and the Republican party by Gov. Wilson and the Democrats, President Taft gave out the following statement:

"The returns insure the election of Gov. Wilson to the presidency. This means an early change in the economic policy of the government in reference to the tariff. If this change can be made without halting prosperity I sincerely hope it may be. The vote for Mr. Roosevelt, the third party candidate, and for Mr. Debs, the Socialist candidate, is a warning that their propaganda in favor of fundamental changes in our constitutional representative government has formidable support. While the experiment of a change in the tariff is being carried out by the Democratic administration it behooves Republicans to gather again to the party standard and pledge anew their faith in their party's principles and to organize again to defend the constitutional government handed down to us by our fathers."

SAYS GREAT CAUSE TRIUMPHS

Princeton, N. J.—Responding to a telegram from the Democratic national chairman, asserting that Gov. Wilson unquestionably was elected, the Democratic candidate sent a dispatch to Mr. McCombs as follows:

"I deeply appreciate your telegram and wish to extend to you and the members of the campaign committee my warm congratulations on the part you have played in the organization and conduct of a campaign [illegible] has triumphed. Every Democrat, every true progressive, of whatever alliance, must now lend his full force and enthusiasm to the fulfillment of the people's hope, the establishment of the people's rights, so that justice and progress may go hand in hand."

TURKISH DISASTER MOST COMPLETE

DEFEAT LIKENED TO SEDAN

English War Correspondent the First to Give the Events of the Few Weeks That Seem to Have Brought About the Downfall of the Ancient Turkish Empire.

London.—The rout of the great Turkish army in Thrace, in which 40,000 Turkish soldiers fell and 75 per cent. of their artillery was captured, is told by Martin H. Donohue, war correspondent for the Daily Chronicle, who was with the Ottoman troops in their panic-stricken flight.

Mr. Donohue's thrilling story, which, to escape the censor, was sent from Tchorlu, the Turkish army headquarters, to Constantinople, and thence by boat to Constanza, Roumania, and cabled from there to London, is as follows:

"Irrevocable disaster has broken the Turkish army. It has suffered an appalling defeat. This has been followed by confusion and a rout for which there is scarcely a parallel in history—a rout which in its later stages degenerated into a wild panic, a stampede, which communicated itself to the whole fighting force.

"As I am writing this dispatch the army corps forming Abdullah Pasha's splendid army lie battered and decimated, and the defensive lines have fled pell-mell before the advancing Bulgarians.

Defeat Is Like Sedan.

"It has been the most complete military disaster since Mukden, the greatest debacle since Sedan. Forty thousand men, the flower of the Turkish troops, have fallen, while Abdullah Pasha himself narrowly escaped their fate. Seventy-five per cent. of his artillery was captured. His men seemed to melt away like snow before the summer sun.

"After the disintegration began it soon became general, brigades dissolved into regiments, regiments into companies, and the companies became small groups until all cohesion disappeared and the demoralization became complete. By handfuls the remnants of the army have found their way back to Tchorlu, the Bulgarian artillery cruelly harassing them, mowing them down in thousands.

"The Bulgarians, advancing in large numbers, strongly supported by their artillery, speedily drove back the Turks, who retired in the direction of Lule Burgas. Throughout the terrible fighting the superiority of the Bulgarian artillery was pronounced. The Turks were unable to stand the murderous fire and withdrew slowly.

"The gunners being dead and a majority of the horses being killed, the artillery was forced to abandon guns to the enemy. The Bulgarians, who displayed extraordinary energy, pressed forward, determined to make the most of their advantage.

Turks Die Bravely.

"By the afternoon the Bulgarians had shelled the Turks out of Lule Burgas.

"Fortunately the inhabitants had fled and the loss of life among noncombatants was small. Having effectually silenced the fire of the Turks, the Bulgarians launched an infantry attack, which stormed the town at the point of the bayonet.

"The greater part of the Turkish garrison had already withdrawn, but the men of the rear guard were caught like rats in a trap. The soldiers of the fourth corps, although they had been without food for two days, offered a stubborn but unavailing resistance. They died to a man.

Sees Troops Slaughtered.

"The Turkish commander in chief had watched the fight from the heights near the village of Satikeui, due east of Lule Burgas. As he observed the Turkish artillery and infantry being mowed down his face grew grave. The Turkish artillery had from the beginning been poorly supplied with ammunition. What it had was practically expended in the morning fight, and now many gunners stood around the empty limbers with folded arms.

"Unable to reply to the Bulgarian fire they awaited death, which came swiftly, with true Ottoman courage.

"Along the whole Turkish front the troops were harrassed by a terrible fire. As time went on it became simply a carnage, men falling in hundreds. The morale of the troops was completely destroyed by the appalling shell fire. When night closed in on the decimated Turks it brought only a short respite to Abdullah Pasha's army from shot and shell. The men badly needed sleep and food, but the Turkish commissariat was nonexistent.

Pursuit Always Relentless.

"No food was there and sleep was impossible, as the pursuing Bulgarians were endowed with relentless force and energy. Turkish dead and wounded lay everywhere and encumbered the ground in all directions.

"Surgeons were few and ambulances absolutely none. The dead lay where they had fallen. Some attempt was made to remove and succor the wounded, but the greater portion perished miserably in the bitter cold of the night.

"Some dragged themselves painfully along, but many, unable to crawl further, owing to physical weakness, cast themselves on the ground or fell into the hands of the Bulgarians.

"For an hour the retreat was in good order, but subsequently, pressed by the mass behind, the vanguard speedily lost all semblance to an organized army. The men abandoned haversacks and rifles, all equipment.

"Two hours after sunrise the Bulgarians obtained information of what was happening in the ranks of Abdullah Pasha's army and started in pursuit. Thenceforward the retreat was a disorderly rout. Sakizkoj was speedily occupied by the Bulgarians, practically without a shot being fired. The Turks' baggage, guns, equipment and all their military stores fell into the hands of the Bulgarians.

Ray of Light for Turks.

"The only ray of hope throughout the long and bitter day of disaster and death was obtained by the partial success of the right wing, under Mukhtar Pasha. While the left wing and the center were being fiercely assailed Mukhtar Pasha, under the orders of Abdullah Pasha, essayed a counter attack. The Turkish right sought to turn the Bulgarian left and there was desperate fighting between Mukhtar Pasha's troops and the Bulgars on Istrandja Heights until night closed in.

"On Wednesday the full strength of the Bulgarian army was hurled against the Turkish left, it being the weakest point of the entire defensive line. Abdullah Pasha's losses had been enormous and the Bulgarians were determined to force the Turkish left center at any cost. In this effort a feeble reply was made by the Turkish artillery and efforts were made to send munitions and provisions to the threatened flank. The transportation was inefficient, and no food forthcoming for the starving, rapidly dwindling army fighting for its life, fresh ground was again and again conceded, and the First corps, which had been holding on grimly in the neighborhood of Turkbej on the northeast of Lule Burgas, was driven out early on Wednesday afternoon, its retreat eastward strewn with dead and dying.

"Its commander implored Abdullah Pasha to send reinforcements and ammunition, saying that he had come to his last cartridges, and his magazines were empty.

Impossible to Aid Wounded.

"The ambulance wagons had broken down, the horses being missing or shot. Consequently those wounded who could walk were left to shift for themselves, limping forward, usually with gaping shell wounds in the head or upper part of the body. Seventy-five per cent. of the wounded had been hit by shrapnel. This bears out eloquent testimony to the murderous precision of the Bulgarian artillery.

"In the darkness of the night, the Turkish commander pursued his way toward Karisolrian, a small village ten miles to the southeast of his old headquarters, in the vain hope of yet saving his army by stemming the retreat of the center.

"Abdullah Pasha may have been acting wisely, but his action was the worst possible step, and it brought disaster. The climax came at three o'clock on Thursday morning. When the Turkish left wing learned of the disappearance of its commander it needed little for the panic-stricken soldier to fire his rifle and shout 'Bulgarians coming' to complete the confusion.

Turkish Army Wholly Unprepared.

"Chaos reigned. The general cry of 'Sauve qui peut' followed. In the darkness of the wintry morning the whole army broke away and made a concerted bolt for the road leading to the rear. Horses, stores, arms, everything was abandoned. Officers mixed pell-mell with the men, and carried away the rear guard in their rush.

"Wednesday settled the fate of Abdullah's army. His force could no longer fight. It had neither ammunition for the guns nor food to sustain the soldiers. Their pitiable plight brought to light every moment the hideous defects of the Turkish army organization. It had occupied the capital lines of battle with a great flourish of trumpets, but it was ill prepared for the Herculean task before it of conquering the highly trained and efficient Bulgarians."

Her Object.

"I married a man without a fault."
"Then that accounts for what I heard."
"What was that?"
"That you married your husband to reform him."

The Real Proof.

"My fiance told me he would prove his love not by words, but by deeds."
"They all say that."
"But he brought the deeds to me in my name."

Moving Exhibition.

Uncle Ezra—"Then you think the battle of Wounded Knee was a greater event than the Reformation?"
Uncle Eben—"Certainly. I've seen them both and I'll bet the 'battle' took at least a thousand more feet of film."—Puck.

Man's Contrariness.

When a man is sick he wants to get well worse than anything else in the world, yet people are pretty shiftless about safeguarding health.—Atchison Globe.

Expediting the Movement.

"A newspaper writer says the English language is 'still marching majestically over the face of the globe.'"
"If that's the case, a word like 'incomprehensibility' probably marches in two sections."

The Result.

"Biggs made money so fast at one time that he had to give it up."
"His health broke down?"
"No; he went to jail for counterfeiting."

We All Know That Kind.

"What are the wild waves saying?" murmured the woman as she stood on the pier viewing the mighty main. "Nothing, Maria," replied the man hoarsely. "They are like some people we know; they make a great deal of noise, but don't say anything."

Plain People.

Tourist—"You say there's true democracy in this town?" Bilge Miller—"Yep. A celluloid collar never kept a man outer high society here."—Boston Post.

MRS. HARMON PLEASED

VISITS GIRLS' INDUSTRIAL HOME AND PRAISES CONDITIONS.

Wife of Governor Says That Appointment of Woman as Matron Has Worked a Transformation.

Columbus.—Mrs. Harmon, upon her return from an inspection of the Girls' Industrial School near Delaware, said a complete transformation had been brought about there. The appointment of Miss Charlotte Dye as matron instead of a man as superintendent, has worked wonders, according to Mrs. Harmon.

"The girls no longer have the hopeless expressions I found when I first went to the institution," she said. "They have something to look forward to. I am very proud of what we have been able to do and I wish now to thank the good women of the state who have aided us. A surprising transformation has been effected in the short time Miss Dye has been in charge."

Mrs. Harmon has offered prizes to the girls in the various cottages who make marks for tidiness and proficiency in work assigned them. She entertained the school by giving an impromptu lecture on the Western trip of the Ohio Building at the Panama Canal Exposition.

Commission To Investigate.

Investigations to be made by the Ohio public service commission into car shortage conditions in this state may result in stringent regulations of the return of equipment by roads throughout the United States. Preliminary inquiry made by the commission into transportation conditions in this state has revealed the fact that the roads operating here are handicapped largely because the lines in other states, and particularly in the West, fail to return equipment. Representatives of all the railroads operating in Ohio have been notified to appear before the commission on November 15, when a special examination into the car shortage will be started. The roads will be required to furnish the commission a complete detailed report of their equipment, what percentage of cars are on their own lines, the average daily loading and movement, what percentage of equipment is on the lines of other roads and the number of cars in the shops or otherwise tied up at terminals or out of operation for repairs.

Supreme Court To Decide.

Whether estates, the income from which is used exclusively for public charity, are taxable under the constitution of 1851 is a question which has reached the Ohio supreme court. The case comes from Cuyahoga county, where a circuit court recently held that use of the income for charitable purposes does not exempt the property from taxation. The style of the suit is the Benjamin Rose institute against the county auditor and county treasurer. Many thousands of dollars in taxes are involved. A feature of the suit is that before the supreme court has determined the status of the estate under the old constitution the taxation amendment, which makes a material change in the exemption clause, will be in effect and the decision as a precedent will be of little value.

Sight Restored to Columbus Woman.

The present extreme of fashion in women's attire is one of the changes which have taken place during the last four years, which impresses Mrs. W. K. Liggett, wife of a constructing engineer of the Jeffrey Manufacturing Co., 393 West Eighth avenue, who has just recovered her sight after suffering from blindness, due to cataract, during that period. Mrs. Liggett said she had heard much of the slimness and scantiness of women's gowns, but did not realize how ridiculous the present styles were. Mrs. Liggett had been without the sight of one eye for seven years and blind for the last four. She underwent operations in Grant hospital recently which, it is believed, will make her sight clearer than she enjoyed before the suggestion of blindness overtook her.

To Make Shoes and Clothing.

Letters were sent by the state board of administration to county auditors and commissioners notifying them that after January 1 the board will be able to supply all the shoes and men's clothing required at the county infirmaries and children's homes of the state. The articles are to be manufactured in the Ohio State reformatory at Mansfield, and the sending of the letters is the first step in the plan for keeping convicts of the state at work making supplies which the state needs. At the present time knitting factories are being installed at the Ohio penitentiary to make underwear for the state institutions, and when all have been supplied the surplus will be disposed of to the counties, as is now proposed to be done with the shoes and men's clothing.

Wants County Supervisors Appointed.

To provide each county with an agricultural supervisor, whose salary shall be paid out of county funds, a bill probably will be presented to the next general assembly for the reorganization of county boards of agriculture. Secretary A. P. Sandles, of the state board of agriculture, has declared he will ask the legislature to make this change. It is proposed to give this supervisor charge of agricultural inspection in his county. Mr. Sandles thinks his plan would result in better crops in the state.

Taxes Will Be Much Greater.

According to figures compiled here, the total increase in the valuation of public utilities in Ohio this year as determined by the state tax commission amounts to approximately $100,000,000. This figure does not include the telegraph and express companies, which of all the utilities have not yet this year been appraised finally. The work of the commission naturally means that the utilities as a whole will pay taxes on property valued at more than $100,000,000 in excess of last year.

Will Ask for More Buildings.

That the legislature at its next session shall be urged to recognize the overcrowding in the state institutions and provide additional buildings, was unanimously decided by the members of the board of administration and the board of charities at a joint meeting. Improvements in general will be suggested, while specific requests will be made for appropriations for additions at the Cleveland State hospital, the Ohio Hospital for Epileptics at Gallipolis, the Dayton State hospital and the custodial farm for feeble-minded, Morgan Station. The establishment of a laboratory here for the scientific study of the causes and the treatment of insanity, degeneracy, and feeble mindedness also will be recommended, in addition to which the purchase of a suitable farm for the penitentiary will be suggested. A special plea will be made to the legislature for the establishment of the laboratory at the Columbus State hospital. This is considered by the members of the boards as highly essential.

Engineers Announce Meeting.

F. E. Sanborn, secretary-treasurer of the Ohio Society of Mechanical, Electrical and Steam Engineers, has sent out announcements of the program for the eleventh annual meeting of this organization, to be held November 21, 22 and 23, at Akron. Among the speakers for the session will be George S. Cooper, mechanical engineer of the Buckeye Engine company, Salem, who will speak on "A System of Gas Engine Governing." Siegfried Rosenzweig, mechanical and consulting engineer of the Erie City Iron Works, Erie, Pa., and Ed W. Patton, master mechanic of Follansbee Brothers company, Follansbee, W. Va. Features of the meeting will be a tour of inspection to the plant of the B. F. Goodrich Rubber company and the plant of the Babcock & Wilson company, boiler manufacturers. Trips will also be taken to the new power company and to O. C. Barber's farm at Barberton.

Agricultural Train.

The Ohio State university, acting in conjunction with the Pennsylvania railroad, announces an agriculture special, which will make a ten-day tour, beginning at Toledo and concluding near that city.

Instructors from the university will accompany the train, which also will carry exhibits of high class and low grade live stock. The train will be provided with coaches which will be used for lecture rooms, and special provision will be made for children. The subjects to be covered embrace dairying, horticulture and soil improvement.

The first day's itinerary covers Toledo to Tiffin, inclusive, the second day to Mansfield, then by successive days to Perkettown, Orrville, Millersburg, Dresden, Mt. Vernon, Galena and Brandywine. From five to seven places will be visited daily, and stops will average an hour and a half each.

Young Negro Ranks First.

Only 13 out of 27 persons who took the state dental examination October 15 were successful, according to the list given out by Dr. Holston Bartilson, 150 East Broad street, a member of the board of examiners. Of these a young colored man, R. M. Swayne of Springfield, received the highest grade, 93 per cent. Robert M. Tribbitt, of Columbus, was one of the successful candidates. Others who passed the examination are: W. J. Salter, Cincinnati; E. J. Schilling, Dillsboro, Ind.; Thomas H. Anron, L. J. Friedlander, J. Finck, and Joseph Bernstein, all of Cleveland; W. R. East, Elida; Wm. L. Burk, Wapakoneta; C. E. Walsh, Ottawa; W. J. Spencer, Houghton, Mich., and H. F. Malluven, Cincinnati.

Delegates Named By Governor.

Ohio delegates to the American Mining congress, which meets in Spokane November 25 to 29, were named by Gov. Harmon. They are Dr. C. V. Martin and W. L. Timmons, of Zanesville; A. Simons, of Redfield; David Williams, of Gloucester; M. D. Monsarrat, B. F. Chapman, Ernest M. Lied, Percy E. Wright, of Columbus, and S. H. Pitkins, of Cleveland.

Rarey To Watch Paroles.

The appointment of Charles D. Rarey, of Groveport, formerly an attache of the probate court, as field officer in charge of men paroled from the penitentiary, was announced by the state board of administration. He succeeds James E. Campbell, son of former Gov. Campbell, and will take up his new work. The position carries with it a salary of $1,500 a year.

In Cincinnati and Cleveland.

The state liability board of awards can legally maintain branch offices at Cleveland and Cincinnati for the adjustment of claims under the workmen's compensation act, so Atty. Gen. Hogan held in a ruling given. The establishment of these offices will obviate the necessity of claimants and witnesses making trips to Columbus from territory including and contiguous to these cities.

To Clear the Bank Building.

Judge C. M. Rogers issued an order directing F. F. Baxter, state superintendent of banks, in charge of the liquidation of the affairs of the Columbia Savings and Trust company, directing him to pay to the Mcnypenny estate the balance of $250,000 due on the bank property site, High and Long streets, and to receive a deed for the same. With the payment of this amount, the property which the bank building is located will be clear of incumbrances.

Bankers Urged To Action.

Secretary A. P. Sandles, of the state board of agriculture, in an address before Group 4, of the Ohio Bankers' association, in session at Washington C. H., urged that efforts be made to have farmers and their sons and employes attend the institutes to be held during the coming winter. There will be two of these held in each county, he said. The farmers' institutes have done more than probably any other factor in arousing the rural producers to a full realization of their opportunities.

TO HOLD CONVENTION

OHIO WOMAN SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION WILL MEET IN COLUMBUS.

Miss Flora La Follette Will Give the Principal Address at Evening Session on November 14.

Columbus, O.—A call to the 27th convention of the Ohio Woman Suffrage association, to meet in Columbus, November 14, has been sent out by the president, Mrs. Harriet Taylor Upton, of Warren.

The convention will be held at the Chamber of Commerce. There will be three sessions, 9:30 a. m., 2 p. m. and 8 p. m. The day meetings will be devoted entirely to business, including the election of officers for the ensuing year and the state delegates to the National Woman Suffrage convention. There will be a meeting of the executive committee at Hotel Hartman the evening of November 13 and also the morning of November 15.

Miss Fola La Follette, a speaker of national reputation, will address the evening meeting.

ELECTRIC LIGHT IN LUNG.

Columbus, O.—Because of the success of a delicate operation performed with the aid of an electric light used internally to light the lung passage, 13-year-old Marjorie Ray, daughter of W. C. Ray, 927 Mt. Pleasant avenue, is fully recovered from the effects of swallowing part of a hickory nut shell which lodged in the right lung.

When the child first became affected it was thought she had pneumonia, but her physician, Dr. J. M. Thomas, was puzzled by peculiar features of the case. When it was learned the child had swallowed piece of a hickory nut shell an X-ray was taken in vain at Grant hospital. The bronchoscope, an instrument to be passed down through the windpipe, having an electric light bulb on the end, then was used.

ASK FOR WATER SERVICE.

Columbus, O.—Following the request of Bexley for water and sewage disposal service, the village of Rarigs and Linden Heights have applied to Director of Service Kinnear for water facilities. The applications are the result of recent action of the state board of health in condemning a number of wells in the villages.

Superintendent O'Shaughnessy, of the water works, declares it will take some time to install mains and connect the systems even if council should vote to furnish water. Linden Heights would receive its supply from the same main that now gives water to Milo. Rarigs would draw its water from the new main which was constructed this summer through the North Side.

FIRST ROAD TO HAVE CUPS.

Springfield, O.—Within a short time sanitary individual drinking cups will be placed on all of the Springfield, Troy & Piqua traction cars, as General Manager Fred Green is having the cars equipped with the cups to comply with the state law. This will be the first traction line in the state of Ohio to be so equipped with the individual cups.

A small box containing the cups will be placed next to the drinking fountain and when a drink is wanted all the passengers will have to do is turn a small knob.

MIDDLETOWN MAN KILLED.

Middletown, O.—Geo. W. Gebhardt, 38, cement contractor, died from injuries received either by being hit by a Big Four train or from an assault made by hold-up men. The theory is that he was hit by the train, but during the few lucid moments between the time he was found and his death he made statements which lead the police to believe that he had been attacked.

COW IS MAN'S NEMESIS.

Springfield, O.—After escaping death when his oil wagon was struck by a D. T. & I. train, Joe Blake is under the care of a physician from the kick of a cow, which he suffered before he reached home. Immediately after the accident in which his wagon was completely demolished, Blake traded his horse for a cow, which promptly kicked him.

CITY TO FIGHT DIPHTHERIA.

Dayton, O.—An emergency bond issue in the sum of $6,000 with which to fight the diphtheria epidemic in this city will be asked of the city council at the next meeting. The money is to be used largely for medical inspection of school children and disinfection of schoolrooms.

REACHES CENTURY MARK.

Xenia, O.—One hundred years of life were rounded out Wednesday when Mrs. Sarah Bigger of Xenia celebrated her one hundredth birthday at her home, many of her friends and relatives gathering about her to join in observance of the event. Still hale and hearty at her ripe old age of an even hundred years Mrs. Bigger was especially bright during the day. Four hundred children of the McKinley school, in Xenia, formed a line and marched to her home on Market street.

ELEGANT HOME IS BURNED.

Portsmouth, O.—Fire, originating in a defective flue in the home of Eli Wilson, two miles north of Harrisonville, totally destroyed the Wilson home and the dwelling of his son-in-law, Fred Haugh, adjoining. The loss is estimated at $8,000. It is not known whether any insurance was carried on the property or its contents. A small portion of the household effects. The Wilson residence was considered one of the most pretentious in the community.

TWO DEER ARE KILLED

Handsome Animals Are Found Dead—Work Is Apparently Done By Dogs.

Lima, O.—The two deer that have been a part of the Faurot park zoo, were found dead in their enclosure. A dog had killed them. Two others were killed at the same place last summer. The handsome pair were the gift of Otis Dotson to the park. They were born in South America, and of a variety peculiar to that continent. The two had been trained to harness and taught to draw a chariot for parade purposes.

Marks of teeth in the throats of the deer, and evidence of a struggle could be seen. Footprints in the enclosure showed that a large dog had done the work. An eight-foot wire fence, surmounted by three strands of barb wire, with no place where even a small animal could enter, makes it a mystery how the dog gained entrance.

WILL IS SET ASIDE

Jury Decides in Favor of Plaintiffs in Litigation Over Estate of Jordan Downs.

Urbana, O.—The case of Hester Downs against the trustees of the Methodist Protestant church of North Lewisburg was decided by a jury in common pleas court in favor of the plaintiff. The decision sets aside the will of Jordan Downs. The case was practically uncontested, but 16 witnesses were examined for the plaintiff.

The plaintiff charged that Jordan Downs, her husband, died on January 12, 1912, leaving a will which was filed on August 12, 1912, bequeathing his property to the plaintiff and the defendants. The plaintiff alleged that this will was made when her husband was incapable.

TRAPPED IN MANHOLE.

Two Men Lose Lives at Dayton By Poisonous Gas.

Dayton, O.—Benjamin F. Gates, 35, married, 19 North Douglass street, is dead, and Joseph Ketcham, 22, of 25 Eastern avenue, will probably die as the result of being trapped in a gas company's manhole on East Monument avenue. William C. Helser, C. M. Leaser and Albert F. Farenkopf, city firemen at the Main street engine house, were overcome in an heroic and successful effort to drag the victims out of the hole. Gates and Ketcham were employes of the Gas company and had entered the pit to blow out a belt line main. Heavy pressure, instead of reduced force, as supposed, broke off the diaphragm valve as the workmen started to loosen it.

HUNTERS WILL HAVE MEETING.

Springfield, O.—The annual meeting of the Clark County Fish and Game association will be held Friday evening, November 8, in the rooms of the Commercial club, the plans having been perfected at a meeting of the directors of the club held recently. There will also be an election of officers for the ensuing year, and President Roy McGregor has named the chairman of two committees to nominate officers. Dr. Will C. Lupfer is at the head of the Bob White ticket, while Ray Johnson is chairman of the English Hare ticket.

LIGHT COMPANY WINS CASE.

Springfield, O.—The jurors trying the $10,000 case of Kate Mason against the Springfield Light, Heat & Power Co., in the common pleas court, returned a verdict in favor of the defendant after being instructed to do so by Judge A. C. Risinger. The decision came after a motion had been filed by the defendants, moving that the case be dismissed, after all of the plaintiff's evidence had been submitted. The plaintiff in the case is the administratrix of the estate of Daniel Tehan, who was killed while in the employ of the defendants two years ago.

STRUCK BY TRAIN

Columbus, O.—Alec Lager, aged 15 years, a gardener, drove in front of a northbound Norfolk and Western passenger just in the rear of the county infirmary. The train hit his rig. Mr. Lager was so badly injured that he died an hour later.

CRUSHED BENEATH WAGON.

Bellefontaine, O.—Emerson, aged 4, son of James Sherk, of North Lewisburg, fell from a load of hay and was crushed to death when the wagon wheels passed over his body. The father saw his son killed, but was powerless to save him.

MAN DIES IN FIRE

Hamilton, O.—In a fire in a small summer kitchen adjoining premises at Lane and Owen street, Engine T. Maxfield was fatally burned and suffocated and Geo. Sullivan suffered painful but not serious burns. The fire was caused by the explosion of a small coal oil stove which one or the other of the men had lighted. Maxfield was lying on a bed in a room adjoining the kitchen when the explosion occurred and seems to have been unable to make any effort to save himself.

Ironton, O.—The Lucy Coles, a transfer boat used by the N. & W. and the A. C. & I. Railway companies to transfer their cars between this city and Ashland, Ky., was burned to the water's edge. The cause of the fire is a mystery.

Lima, O.—Discovery was made that $440 was missing from a package of currency delivered to a local express office by the City bank and consigned to the Alger Savings Bank. The amount was taken from a roll of $2,000.

IN THESE DAYS OF DIVORCE

Really Nothing Remarkable in the Simple and Frank Explanation of the Small Boy.

We were walking down the street Sunday and we saw the most beautiful child sitting on the front steps of a pretty house, says Ted Robinson. His eyes were so big and blue, his curly head so golden, his innocent smile so frank and inviting that we could not resist the temptation to enter into conversation with him.

"Well, son," we said in the idiotically genial way with which an adult usually addresses a child, "how old are you?"

"Four," lisped the infant. (He didn't really lisp it, because you can't lisp when you say four; but that's the way children are supposed to do.)

"Isn't that fine!" (It would have been just as fine if he'd been three, though, or five. More idiocy.) "And whose little boy are you?"

"Mamma's li'l boy."

"Aren't you papa's little boy, too?"

"Nope."

"Why aren't you papa's little boy?"

"The decree gimme to mamma."

Then we went on our pleasant way.—Savannah Morning News.

GOOD TRAINING.

"Newpop would make a fine chauffeur."

"Why, how can you tell?"

Fable for Borrowers.

An Arab went to his neighbor and said: "Lend me your rope."

"I can't," said the neighbor.

"Why can't you?"

"Because I want to use the rope myself."

"For what purpose?" the other persisted.

"I want to tie up five cubic feet of water with it."

"How on earth," sneered the would-be borrower, "can you tie up water with a rope?"

"My friend," said the neighbor, "Allah is great and he permits us to do strange things with a rope when we don't want to lend it."—Boston Evening Transcript.

Ancients Knew Elevators.

That the ancient Romans knew how to work lifts is the latest discovery reported from Rome in connection with the Palatine excavations. Pre-Romulan remains have been found, including 12 ancient lifts. One of the latter, which descends into the earliest known city, is now being cleaned and put into working order for the Archaeological Congress.

Sound Dad.

"It won't work."

BACKACHE "GETS ON THE NERVES"

Many who suffer from backache and weak kidneys are unnaturally irritable, fretful and nervous. Not only does constant backache "get on the nerves", but bad kidneys fail to eliminate all the uric acid from the system, and uric acid irritates the nerves, keeping you "on edge" and causing rheumatic, neuralgic pains. Doan's Kidney Pills cure these ills by curing the kidneys. Here's proof:

An Iowa Case

Mrs. J. Hunt, 808 4th St., Fairfield, Ia., says: "For thirty years I suffered from kidney trouble. I had severe backaches, headaches and dizzy spells and my limbs swelled so I couldn't walk. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me when everything else failed. I cannot praise them too highly."

A NEW BIRTH OF FREEDOM

Under the leadership of Woodrow Wilson the Democratic party has won its greatest victory since 1852.

But this victory is no tawdry partisan triumph. It is no vote of confidence in the Democratic party as a party. It is a mandate from the people, and woe be unto the leaders of this Democracy if they falter in obedience to that mandate.

The country is seething with political discontent in spite of its unparalleled material wealth and prosperity. This discontent is confined to no particular class or section. Rich and poor alike, children of fortune and children of poverty, have begun to lose faith in the efficacy of their Government to establish justice and promote the general welfare. They are not sure where the fault lies, they are not united as to the remedy, but this they know—that their institutions have been seized by privileged interests and turned against them, that subtle, mysterious forces operating unseen have proved time after time that their power over public affairs was greater than the power of the people as a whole, and they demand that their Government be emancipated from this partnership.

This is the great work that confronts Woodrow Wilson and the Democratic party—to restore popular confidence in the institutions of the Republic and re-establish a government of the people, by the people and for the people.

For sixteen years the Republican party has been in continuous control of national affairs. In 1896 it polled 7,104,792 votes. In 1900 it polled 7,207,923 votes. In 1904 it polled 7,623,486 votes. In 1908 it polled 7,678,908 votes. But suddenly this seemingly invincible organization came crashing down to ruin because it had not kept the faith. The Democratic party in turn will go crashing down to ruin if it does not keep the faith.

The American people are no longer hypnotized by party labels and party emblems. They are concerned with principles of government and with parties as a means of translating those principles into action. They have made Woodrow Wilson President because they believe that his ideals are their ideals; that his courage is their courage, and that he will find a way to right the wrongs against which they have protested.

A man of lesser character, of lower ideals, of smaller ability, could not have won the victory that Gov. Wilson won yesterday. He could not have appealed to the imagination of the country as Woodrow Wilson appealed to it. No man has ever been elevated to the Presidency who was more fully the people's President than this college professor who scorned alike the support of the bosses and the support of Plutocracy. It is a tremendous compliment that the voters have paid to him, but the responsibility is equally great.

If he should fail, the consequences must be doubly disastrous. If he succeeds, as The World believes he will, a new era will have begun in American history, with a new vindication of republican institutions and a new vindication of the immortal principles of the Republic. This Nation will indeed have a new birth of freedom.—N. Y. World.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

[illegible] Roosevelt Had Not Been Cheated

Surveying the ruins of the Republican party, wrecked in a dozen of its greatest strongholds where it has fallen into third place, or has been, so [illegible] in many [illegible] that [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible]

[illegible] of their candi- [illegible] pleased with the [illegible] in the country today? If [illegible] the same opportunity would they take the same unfair, malignant and unscrupulous course?

And what do the masses of the Republican rank and file who clung to the old name and the old organization in the face of certain defeat, think of machine rule and boss tyranny? Will they purge what is left of their party? Will they bring it into touch with the young, virile, Progressive movement which is the wonder of the day and the year?

On the answer which millions of old-line Republicans make to these questions hinge momentous consequences. On the possibility that such wisdom will prevail depends the outlook for all three of the parties which divided the vote of the country in yesterday's epoch-making struggle for supremacy.

But one thing is certain, whatever else may be in doubt. To Progressive principles and Progressive leaders belongs the future.—Cleveland Leader.

Declare War on Colds

A crusade of education which aims "that common colds may become uncommon within the next generation" has been begun by prominent New York physicians. Here is a list of the "don'ts" which the doctors say will prevent the annual visitation of the cold:

"Don't sit in a draughty car."
"Don't sleep in hot rooms."
"Don't avoid the fresh air."

To which we would add—when you take a cold get rid of it as quickly as possible. To accomplish that you will find Chamberlain's Cough Remedy most excellent. Sold by all dealers.

MENTOR

A very slight fall of snow the last of the week (which soon melted) has put us in condition to look for the Indian Summer now, as that pleasant part of autumn always follows Squaw Winter sometime in November, according to the traditions of the pioneer fathers.

Not very much interest is being expressed here about who is elected president tomorrow, as they seem to think the crops will continue to grow big; and interests of all kinds will continue to increase as long as this country of ours continues to grow and attract foreigners by the million to our shores. That the president has very much of an influence over the "dinner pail" contents, seems too absurd for any person to intimate seriously.

What is absorbing the interests of our village folk, is whether we are to have a union high school such as other places have, or not! It is now fifteen years, since a petition was circulated all through the east end of our village, asking that the corporate limits be extended to take in Burridge Ave. (probably the wish was to extend as far as Maple St.) and there was an overwhelming majority in favor of said extension. The village council ought to have taken the matter in hand; to have appointed a committee to ascertain if really that was the desire of most of the people, and then they should have gone ahead and extended the limits! Now, the wish is to have the line extended to Burridge Corners on the east, and there are very few who would offer the least opposition. That there is an East and a West Mentor, is a shame to us, and strangers must think us very quarrelsome. We ought to unite our forces and have a good central school building and teams to gather up the country children and bring them in to the school, taking them home again at night.

There is some talk of asking the voters inside of the Corporation to issue bonds for a $20,000 new school house, to stand where the old one is now. The idea was sprung upon the voters only a few days ago, there has not been time to think it up or talk it over, and we do certainly hope that no action will be taken until the whole village can unite and erect such a building as will meet the needs and the requirements of school life, at the present time.

The question of where such a building could be put, is of very small moment! What we want and need, is for our people to get together in one corporation, and then the land upon which to build, would be very easily and peaceably found.

The ladies of the Disciple Aid Society are planning a Bazaar to be held probably the first week in December, later particulars will be given, as soon as more of the details are settled upon.

There is a move on hand to form a "Lake County Athletic League" and to that end the various teachers are to meet in the Y. M. C. A. building this coming Saturday, at 10 a. m. It is high time that the games of the school children were under the supervision of the teachers, and we were glad to learn of the visit of Dr. Brown, and that basket ball and other sensible games had already been started here.

The West Mentor teachers are to go over to Willoughby to the College building on Nov. 6th, and the East Mentor teachers to Painesville to the Y. M. C. A. building, the next day, the 7th, for instruction on three or four simple games that are wanted at present, after which they will be able to direct with greater interest and success.

Miss Elnora Snell spent the summer vacation in Mrs. Garfield's family as second girl, and since the family returned to California, has entered the Andrews' school in Willoughby, where she will take the course of study, and learn dressmaking.

Several of the friends of Mrs. Lloyd Tuttle attended a luncheon at her pleasant home in Painesville on Tuesday, we understand.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry King entertained the thirty members of the Methodist Sunday School Board on Tuesday evening, at their country home "Southwood" where a thoroughly fine time was enjoyed.

Mr. and Mrs. George Hoose were guests of their brother, Mr. Warren House and his family, on Waite Hill on Saturday last.

Mrs. McCarty has just returned from spending two or three months with relatives in Pa.

Hallowe'en passed rather more quietly than usual, there being more "at home" parties, and much less rowdyism on the street, and no damage to property so far as we have been able to learn. The village school bell was rung more or less all night, and some growling indulged in by old folks who have forgotten they used to indulge in when they were young and giddy.

Mrs. J. G. Jackson leaves here tomorrow for southern Florida, where she will join her husband and remain the rest of the winter.

Mrs. Alonza Ritter has been very sick again, but is much better at date.

Miss Luella Kerr is able to ride around the village with her father, and is still slowly gaining in health again.

Mr. A. S. Gregg, the Supt. American Civic Reform Union, with headquarters in the Caxton building Cleveland, spoke to a good audience Sunday evening in the Methodist church here. This Union already numbers several hundred thousand members, all of whom are fighting "Mormonism," "The White Slave Traffic" and "Adulteration of Food." If we are not mistaken, all forms of temperance work comes under the last head, and the Union is hoping to accomplish what no one organization can hope to namely the suppression of vice.

The Pierson girls had a delightful Hallowe'en party at their home on that interesting evening. Miss Josephine Jaheson and her sister, Miss Marguerite, gave a party in honor of their cousin Mr. Leonard Peterson of North Tonawanda, N. Y., who is visiting here. And about thirty of the others of our young folks got the use of the old Goldsmith cottage on the Fair Grounds where they had supper and the joy of sitting 'round a wood fire and telling ghost stories until the "wee sma hours."

Mr. and Mrs. Abram Phelps visited Mrs. Perrins in Cleveland recently.

Mrs. Frank Mather is soon to go to Pittsburgh, where she will be the guest of her husband's relatives for a few days.

The Center market is for rent, Joe. Trabert having decided that he prefers to live in the city, has hired out there. Some one who wants a first class situation for a meat market, ought to come out here and rent this for now is the time for big margins, when the ice bills run low. If any one wants to know if there is any money to be made in running a butcher's shop out here in Mentor, just ask Mr. Jerome Houghton who for a number of years kept the meat market ever in the village.

The new tenant of Mr. John Oliver is named Mr. Martin Sour! But what is in a name, anyhow?

A large and enthusiastic Queen Esther Circle has been started by Mrs. Schaffner and Mrs. Tom Cadle, with meetings every two weeks.

About fifty members of the Willoughby Chamber of Commerce came over here on Wednesday by invitation, partly to visit the Knitting Mill and largely to get acquainted with their neighbors on the east. Supper was served by the Ladies Aid and sixty-five plates were laid, after which the lecture by Judge Webber of Elyria was very highly enjoyed by a large audience, of both ladies and gentlemen.

The Miscellany Club was held at the home of Mrs. T. O. Hart on Wednesday at which all the members were present except three. Mrs. Blachmon, Mrs. Lloyd Tuttle and Mrs. Amidon were present as guests from Painesville. Mrs. Bliss, as the veteran suffragette of the village, read an excellent paper on "Woman Suffrage Movement." Mrs. Ben Reutoelk gave her experience somewhat in a paper entitled "Crossing the Atlantic." Miss Frances Cleveland read a most amusing Irish story, after which a straw vote was taken for president, the result of which astonished some of us. The vote stood 19 for Roosevelt, 11 for Wilson, and but 8 for Taft.

Mrs. Anna Canfield Patchen of Chardon has been a recent guest at the home of her uncle, Mr. Franklin Murray.

Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Lockwood of Cleveland are spending a few weeks down here at the charming country home of their daughter, Mrs. John Oliver and her family.

Miss [illegible] Armstrong, the enterprising president of the [illegible] Aid Society, has divided the forty-[illegible] members into six different bands and induced each band to take upon itself the entertainment (of some sort or other) for one month, during the winter. The object of all this "hustling" is not for the carrying on of the church service, as some have got the notion, but to raise money for a pipe organ, seven hundred dollars of which, we understand are already in hand. The November and December bands are to unite, and will probably hold a Bazaar and a supper of some sort.

Mr. Charles Church journeyed home from Akron for the Tuesday evening "meet" at Mr. King's house, declaring he wouldn't have missed it for anything! Mr. Church is agent for the Dunn and Bradstreet people.

The news that the cemetery the "City of the Dead" was getting so full that a part of the Mather farm had to be bought in order to make room for the rest of us—was rather startling! If people will insist on being brought back here to be buried—just because they lived here a little while, once—well, it shows that Mentor is a good place in which to make a home after all.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Q. Fenner were detained from starting for their Eustis, Florida, home as planned, by the serious illness of Mrs. Fenner, who suffered an attack of appendicitis. Dr. Maage of Willoughby is in attendance, and she is getting along very well, we understand.

The ladies of the M. E. Missionary Society are to hold their November Thank Offering Missionary Tea in the church next Thursday the 14th, at which all members and visitors will be taxed ten cents for their supper. ### UNIONVILLE

While driving on their way to Geneva Thursday, Mrs. Chas. Fankhaner and Mrs. Orlof decided to visit at the Billey place near the Diagonal crossing. They accepted an invitation to stay to dinner, and later went out to feed their horse which was hitched to the fence. Mrs. Fankhaner removed the bits from the animal's mouth, and the horse began to dance around. She tried to control the frightened beast, but was thrown to the ground and the horse stopped over her several times, missing her body by a very narrow margin. The hitching strap then broke and the frightened animal bolted towards the west, and was finally caught west of North Madison.

HIS FATE.

Wife (sweetly)—Don't let him worry you. You can settle with him hereafter.

England's Motto.

Dieu et Mon Droit—God and My Right—the royal motto of England, was the parole of the day given by Richard I. (he of the Lion Heart) to his army at the battle of Gisors in France, on the 20th of September 1898, when the French army was signally defeated. Dieu et Mon Droit appears to have been first assumed as a motto by Henry VI, 1422-1462. Semper Idem—"Always the Same"—was one of the mottoes of Queen Elizabeth, also adopted by Queens Mary and Anne.

Situations Vacant.

"Things with me," he said, "are at sixes and sevens. I feel the great need of a woman in my home—one who would straighten out my tangled affairs and make life worth living once again."

"Yes?" she queried gently.

"Do you know," he continued, "of any good, able-bodied woman whom I could get to clean the house?"

The Best She Could Do.

"Why don't you want to let me hold your hand?"

"What good would it do you to hold my hand?"

"It would make me glad and give me courage, perhaps, to—to say something that I—that I—er—"

"Then please hold both of my hands."

"PROUD AND GLAD"
Because Mother Looked So Well After Quitting Coffee.

Like thousands of others, the drug—caffeine—in coffee was slowly but steadily undermining her nervous system and interfering with natural digestion of food. (Tea is just as injurious as coffee because it contains caffeine, the poisonous drug found in coffee.)

"For 30 years," she writes, "I have used coffee. Have always been sickly—had heart trouble and dyspepsia with ulcers in stomach and mouth so bad, sometimes, I was almost distracted and could hardly eat a thing for a week.

"I could not sleep for nervousness, and when I would lie down at night I'd belch up coffee and my heart would trouble me. It was like poison to me. I was thin—only weighed 125 lbs., when I quit coffee and began to use Postum.

"From the first day that belching and burning in my stomach stopped, I could sleep as soundly as anyone and, after the first month, whenever I met any friends they would ask me what was making me so fleshy and looking so well.

"Sometimes, before I could answer quick enough, one of the children or my husband would say, 'Why, that is what Postum is doing for her'—they were all so proud and glad.

"When I recommend it to anyone, I always tell them to follow directions in making Postum, as it is not good to taste if weak, but fine when it has the flavor and rich brown color." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Yellow Letter

by William Johnston

Illustrations by V. L. Barnes

COPYRIGHT 1911 THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

Harding Kent calls on Louise Farrish to propose marriage and finds the house in great excitement over the attempted suicide of her sister Katharine. Kent starts an investigation and finds that Hugh Crandall, suitor for Katharine, who had been forbidden the house by General Farrish, had talked with Katharine over the telephone just before she shot herself. A torn piece of yellow paper is found, at sight of which General Farrish is stricken with paralysis. Kent discovers that Crandall has left town hurriedly. Andrew Elser, an aged banker, commits suicide about the same time as Katharine attempted her life. A yellow envelope is found in Elser's room. Post Office Inspector Davis, Kent's friend, takes up the case. Kent is convinced that Crandall is at the bottom of the mystery. Katharine's strange outcry puzzles the detectives. Kent and Davis search Crandall's room and find an address, "Lock Box 17, Ardway, N. J." Kent goes to Ardway to investigate and becomes suspicious of a "Henry Cook." A woman commits suicide at the Ardway Hotel. A yellow letter also figures in this case. Kent calls Louise on the long distance telephone and finds that she had just been called by Crandall from the same booth. "Cook" disappears. The Ardway postmaster is missing. Inspector Davis arrives at Ardway and takes up the investigation. He discovers that the dead woman is Sarah Sacket of Bridgeport. Louise telephones Kent imploring him to drop the investigation. Kent returns to New York to get an explanation from Louise. He finds the body of a woman in Central Park and more yellow letters.

CHAPTER IX—(Continued).

I was puzzled beyond expression. Why should Louise refuse to see me? I was conscious of having done nothing to offend her. If only I could see her for just a minute to find out what was the matter! I felt that I must reach her. For an instant I was tempted to brush past the maid and force my way in. Surely Louise of her own accord would not treat me thus. She must be beside herself with grief. Perhaps she was under the same malign influence that so distressed her sister. Yet even in the depths of despair we observe the conventionalities.

"Will you ask Miss Louise when she can see me?" I found myself saying in calm tones to the maid.

Again she closed the door in my face. Again I waited.

"Miss Louise says that she will see you if you will return in an hour," was the message that was brought me.

I left the Farrish door and stumbled blindly up the street. The plight in which I found myself seemed inexplicable, maddening. I was sure Louise loved me. Had she not turned to me in the first hour of her distress? Had she not telephoned me when her sister shot herself? Had she not permitted me to take her in my arms? Had she not commissioned me to solve the mystery of the yellow letter? Yet why had she bade me discontinue my search? Why had she shut her door to me? What could be her motive? What could have influenced her against me?

Torn by a hundred conflicting emotions, I traversed street after street, not knowing or caring whither my feet were taking me. I must have retraced my steps, for I found myself in the block where the Farrishes lived. I looked at my watch and saw it was still half an hour before the time I had been told to return. I turned away from the house and wandered aimlessly on. There was some mystery in Louise's conduct I could not fathom. She refused to see me, yet just ahead of me some one else had been admitted to the house. A wave of jealousy swept over me. Who was this other man? I racked my brain, striving to recall his appearance, trying to remember what there was that was familiar about him.

All at once it came to me. A wild rage filled me. I knew now who he was. A picture of the office in that little hotel in New Jersey came to my mind, as it looked when I stood by the stove drying my clothes. A man had come to the desk and got his key and had walked past me as he went to his room. I knew now where I had seen that man who was admitted to the Farrish home. It was the man called Cook.

It was Hugh Crandall.

CHAPTER X.

Who Was the Thief?

An unbidden and unwelcome guest, jealousy, came and sat by the altar of my heart, stirring the fires of my love for Louise into furious darts of flame that scarred my soul. That Crandall—for I was positive now that the visitor who had entered the Farrish home had been he—should have been admitted to the house with so many things pointed to his guilt, while I, an accepted lover, and certainly Louise's faithful servitor, had been barred with such scant courtesy, filled me with dumb, unreasoning rage. I felt that all claims of friendship and of service, even disregarding the still stronger claims of honest love, entitled me to far different treatment.

Yet even in the burst of anger that overwhelmed me there was not a single thought of harshness toward Louise. I felt that if I could but see her she would explain everything satisfactorily. It was toward Crandall that all my wrath was directed. Feeling as I did, sure that he was responsible for Katharine's attempted suicide and for her poor father's plight, I feared that his visit to the house boded ill for Louise. Undoubtedly his malign influence had persuaded her to bid me drop my efforts to solve the mystery. He must have realized that I was close on his trail, so dangerously close that with the effrontery of the daring criminal he had ventured to come to the house in one last effort to thwart my plans for his exposure.

As I became calmer I resolved on a course of action. Louise's strange request to me over the telephone must have been made because she was dominated by the fear of this villain, who had brought disaster on her father and sister. Perhaps she feared that some evil might befall me if I persisted in trying to run him to earth. Possibly she was afraid that still greater evil might come to those she loved. I felt that for her own happiness it was necessary that I should continue my course. I would go on with my investigation and once for all free her from the crushing thrall of this hidden evil. I would wait where I was until Crandall had left the house, then I would insist on seeing her and telling her my resolve, nor would I permit her to dissuade me from it.

On the corner was a drug store. Sheltered by its awning I took my stand to wait until Crandall left the house. I could see the Farrish door, yet my presence there under the awning would hardly be noticed. I had not long to wait. In about five minutes the door opened and the caller emerged. This time I had an opportunity to get a good look at him. I was right. His face was that of the man who had been registered in the Ardway hotel as Henry Cook, who had so abruptly left the room when the inquest was being held as I had begun to ask questions about the yellow letter, who had driven from the town behind the fastest horse obtainable.

He came swinging down the street past where I stood. As he came closer I was amazed to note that his face was not the unnatural color of the morphine user's that I expected, but ruddy with health. His eyes, however, wore a strained expression and his brow was knotted with wrinkles. I was strongly tempted to spring out from where I stood as he passed, to seize him by the throat and to make him tell me all I wished to know about the hideous mystery. Yet better judgment withheld my hand. After all, the evidence I had against him was not of the tangible sort that would convict. Even though I knew of his telephoning Katharine just before she shot herself, even though General Farrish had learned something about him that barred him from the house, even though we had found in his rooms a hypodermic syringe and the address in New Jersey where the third suicide had taken place, even though I myself had noted his suspicious actions there, there was nothing definite enough to warrant seizing him as yet. I watched him as far down the avenue as my eye could follow and then turned toward the Farrish house. This time I was admitted without delay. Apparently the maid had new instructions.

"I'll tell Miss Louise you are here," she said as she showed me into the reception room.

As I waited I tried to think how I should greet Louise. While there was much that I might reproach her for, I felt that surely it had not been her fault. I knew she must be acting under compulsion. I was determined, though, to let her know that I knew that Hugh Crandall had been in the house.

Suddenly I heard a smothered scream upstairs and a second later Louise burst into the room. There was terror in her face as she ran to me.

"Oh, Harding," she gasped, "it's gone—stolen!"

"What do you mean? What's stolen?" I cried, seizing her hands tightly in my own.

She was trembling all over and her breath came in quick, short jerks. She was dressed in an automobile hat and coat, but even through the thick folds of her coat I could feel the palpitating of her heart. The new mystery, whatever it was, had been too much for her already overstrained nerves. She was in a condition closely bordering on hysteria.

"Tell me about it, what was it?" I said.

"The yellow letter—it's gone—stolen!"

"Where was it?"

"I had taken it with me the morning I went down to Inspector Davis' office, but after he had compared it with the Elser fragment he had returned it to me. I had restored it to Louise when Davis and I called on her after our visit to Mrs. Trask's boarding house. I had not seen it since then. My last recollection of it was placing it in her hand as Davis and I left the house.

"Let me think," she said, trying hard to regain her composure. "When you and Mr. Davis were here the other day you gave it back to me. I took it upstairs and put it in a drawer in a little desk in my room. I locked the desk and hid the key in a vase on the mantel. It went to the desk just now to get it and it was gone."

"Was the desk locked?"

She nodded.

"Who could have taken it?" I asked. Even as I framed the question there came to me the thought of Crandall's visit. He had been in the hotel in Ardway where the woman committed suicide after reading a yellow letter and tearing it up. The scraps of that letter had disappeared. More likely he had come here just to get that scrap of yellow paper lest its evidence might bring home his crimes.

"Who has been in the house?"

"No one but the doctors and nurses and the servants," said Louise, flushing uneasily as she spoke.

I waited, expecting her to mention Crandall's visit, but though she hesitated for a second she said nothing of it.

"I wonder who could have taken it?" she said after an awkward pause.

"What motive could any one have?" I asked, determined to direct her thoughts to Crandall. "The only person who would have a reason for mak[illegible] who [illegible] against him."

There was a silence while we both pondered the situation.

"You remember," said Louise suddenly, "the agitation my father showed at sight of that paper. If he were not lying paralyzed upstairs I think he would have tried to gain possession of it."

"How is your father, and your sister?" I asked, suddenly recalling that I had asked after neither of them.

"Katharine is much better," said Louise. "She is entirely conscious, though very weak, but the doctor says that she will in all probability recover quickly. My father's condition remains the same, though he seems to have regained the use of his right hand. He wrote some brief directions to-day about his business."

"Are you sure of all the servants?" I asked.

"All of them have been with us for years; all but one, ever since before my mother's death. I would not think of distrusting any of them."

"Are you certain the house has not been entered in the night?"

I was asking these questions with a view of convincing her that it was impossible for any one but Crandall to have taken the yellow scrap—for any one else to have even a motive for taking it.

"That would be impossible," she said. "All the doors and windows are protected by burglar alarms and I know they are in working order or I would have heard about it."

"There is or there must have been," I said slowly, "some traitor in the house, some thief, some one who had an object in getting hold of that paper."

"There has been no one here," said Louise with a painful effort, "no one answering that description."

"How did you come to look for the paper in your desk?"

"I wanted—" she stopped short.

"Mr. Kent," she said, her entire manner toward me stiffening as she withdrew her hands from mine, "I asked you last night if you would not cease your inquiries at once."

"But—but—" I protestingly began.

"I asked you to do what I requested without any questions. You have told me that you loved me. If that is the case I know you will do what I ask without trying to force my confidence. Isn't it enough for you to know that I wish you to do it?"

"Louise, dear," I said firmly, "a mysterious trail of hidden evil in some way has crossed your home. It has stricken your sister and your father. You yourself asked me to try to find the secret and I vowed that I would. I don't know what your motive is in making this strange request, but I can't believe you are doing it of your [illegible] ful. Is it not so?"

"Don't ask me, Harding," she begged piteously. "I can't tell you. It is not my secret. I can tell [illegible] nothing. [illegible]"

More than ever now I was convinced that fear of Crandall dominated her. Quickly following on his telephone message he had come to the house and had cast over her the same mysterious spell as had fallen on her sister. More than ever was I determined to follow the trail of mystery to its end, no matter where it lay or what it cost. What was life to me if the woman I loved was to be for ever under a shadow, in the power of some hidden criminal who might prey on her as he had done on the other members of her family? I felt it my duty toward her to go on and, if I could, compel her to divulge something of what she was holding back from me.

"Why did you want that bit of the yellow letter? What were you going to do with it?"

"I can't tell you. Please don't ask me."

"Why do you want me to stop my inquiries?"

"I can't tell you. Please don't ask."

"What was Hugh Crandall doing here this morning?"

The question, direct and blunt as I put it, had almost the same effect as if I had fired a bullet at her. She caught her breath quickly and her face turned pale. I thought that she was going to faint. With a great effort she recovered, and looking me straight in the eye, she answered softly: "Mr. Crandall was not here this morning. What made you think he was?"

I did not try to conceal the open-eyed amazement with which I stared at her as she gave me this unequivocal reply. What could it mean? I could not, would not believe that this high principled, honorable girl would wilfully deceive me, yet I was as sure as that I was standing there that Hugh Crandall had been in the house that morning. Could it have been that he had entered without her knowledge? Was it possible that one of the maids in the Farrish home was in his pay and had permitted him to enter without Louise's knowledge? That might explain the rifling of the locked desk. The maid might know of Louise's habit of hiding the key in a vase. It began to look as if I had a solution of this new mystery. Yet it could hardly be possible for Crandall to have been in the house for fully half an hour without Louise knowing it. Furthermore, why had admittance been denied me when I first called?

Autograph Tells a Tale

There is always a certain amount of interest attached to the deductions drawn by graphologists from the signatures of eminent men. Here, for example, is an illuminating description of the kaiser's autograph, supplied by an eminent Berlin graphologist.

"To begin with, there is a crochet, a sign of pertinacity, followed by a vertical dash, showing audacity, energy, regardless of any obstacle. Then there is an acute angle, a sign of firmness and aggressiveness. The first stroke of the 'W' indicates a feeling of superiority over the rest of the universe. The termination of the imperial 'W' suggests that the sovereign sometimes finds himself struggling with the multitude of his thoughts, or the power of his instincts.

"The other letters forming the signature show similar characteristics," the graphologist proceeds. "The final 'm' is indicative of great diplomacy, which to the analyst suggests subtlety. The latter also suggests the impossibility of the suppression of the 'ego.' The flourish which terminates the imperial autograph shows a suppleness of spirit, a desire to be loved.

"The two terminating points indicate defiance and generally the characteristics are those of an extraordinary imagination."

The Spider Cheat.

Many species of spiders are interesting on account of their physical construction or their habits, but the most curious specimens are probably to be found in the woods of Sumatra; and these naturalists call, not without reason, "spider cheats." This insect, in order to trap the flies, etc., on which it feeds, hides on a leaf and spins a web of neutral color, making an illusion so perfect that the prey not only does not fly, but seems attracted by the peculiar termination of the web on the edge of the leaf. This is a perfect knot in appearance and gives to the trap the general shape of a miniature palm-leaf fan with [illegible] "handle."—Harper's Weekly.

"Silk stockings must be very cheap in America. Nowhere in the world do women's slim and supple ankles gleam in lustrous silk as they do here."

The speaker was Robert Loraine, the English actor. He continued:

"A married man told me the other day that, going into one of your department stores, he said to a floorwalker:

"'I'm looking for something pretty in silk stockings.'

"'That remark,' he said, 'describes, I believe, practically every one of our young ladies.'"

The Rev. Edmund Heslop of Wigton, Pa., suffered from Dropsy for a year. His limbs and feet were swollen and puffed. He had heart fluttering, was dizzy and exhausted at the least exertion. Hands and feet were cold and he had such a dragging sensation across the loins that it was difficult to move. After using 5 boxes of Dodds Kidney Pills the swelling disappeared and he felt himself again. He says he has been benefited and blessed by the use of Dodds Kidney Pills. Several months later he wrote: I have not changed my faith in your remedy since the above statement was authorized. Correspond with Rev. E. Heslop about this wonderful remedy.

A Humboldt rancher returned from a year's trip through the east to find that a one-time neighbor of his, a man noted for his perfect patience, had been having a siege of bad luck. Upon hearing the news he immediately sought out the neighbor to condole with him.

"Well, John," he said, after greetings had been exchanged, "I hear you lost all of your timber through the forest fires."

The other man nodded.

"And they say that the river cut off your best bottom land; that your hogs all died of cholera; that your wife and children had been sick, and that they have now foreclosed the mortgage on your other place."

John nodded again. "Yes, it's all true," he said, looking about him at what had once been his prosperous farm, "all true. Why, sometimes I get almost discouraged."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Chivalrous in Face of Misfortune.

At a mass meeting recently in a nearby town an old and foremost citizen who clings to the sartorial style of years ago, was called upon for his views on the subject in discussion. He made a brief speech, and as he was compelled to hurry back to his office he turned to the seat next to his, on which he had deposited his silk hat, just in time to see a woman flatten it completely by sitting on it.

Ever polite, his feelings were nevertheless stirred, and the best he could think of to say under the circumstances was:

"I—I—I hope you have not injured yourself, madam."—Kansas City Star.

EXERCISE IN THE HOME
DAILY TASKS THAT ARE REALLY BEAUTIFYING.

Physical Culture Made Easy If One Can Only Be Brought to Realize Health-Bringing Agents Not Properly Appreciated.

Have you ever thought of the great value of the exercise you take while attending to your household duties? Some of the most valuable forms of exercise are those associated with the ordinary tasks of every day life.

The woman with a home, and who is fortunate enough to be able to look after it herself, has a list of splendid exercises at her command. I discovered this fact a number of years ago, when teaching physical culture. At the same time I was doing the housework for my little family of four, and I found some very interesting comparisons. There were over a hundred exercises in the system I was teaching, besides many so-called whole body movements. I found that a large number of the exercises were exact duplicates of movements I made while carrying on the homely tasks that are usually looked upon as drudgery.

One exercise—called "The Bell Ringers"—brought the arm muscles into play with much the same movement as we get from sweeping, and after I discovered this similarity, I never took a broom in my hands without thinking of it. Unconsciously I found that the task of sweeping had grown to be a real pleasure and the exercise a welcome one.

Another one I recall was picking an imaginary bunch of grapes from a tall trellis, requiring the body to be balanced for a moment upon the toe of one foot and stretching the arm upward in an effort to pluck the tempting fruit which hung almost out of reach. The value of the exercise was in the stretching it gave the muscles, and how many times I have duplicated it when trying to take a clothesline from a tall pole or when reaching for something from a pantry shelf that was above my head.

One exercise which I often recall was the kneeling exercise. The body was slowly lowered while counting four till both knees rested on the floor with the body in an upright position. This was fairly easy but the difficulty of the movement consisted in slowly rising from the lowly position upon four more counts without touching the hands to the floor or bending the body forward. I am quite willing to confess that while I frequently assume the kneeling position when occasion demands it, I do not always rise so gracefully and with as perfect poise as the exercise requires. But I always think of it and I know it is splendid for the muscles.

I could draw similar comparisons from each one of a hundred movements, but these are enough to show the great benefit we derive from the variety of exercise we go through every day, and will serve to set us thinking a bit. Everything we do brings something of value to us, if we do it pleasantly and cheerfully, no matter how insignificant and unimportant it seems. It will aid us materially to gain in health and happiness if we try to turn the homely things of daily life into pleasures with a full realization of their great value as health-bringing agents instead of considering them in the light of irksome duties.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES.

C. E. D.: If you wish to make a shampoo, shave up a cupful of soap in two quarts of cold water, preferably soft water, and let it stand for twenty-four hours, when it is ready to use. If your hair is very oily it is quite permissible to add a tablespoonful of laundry ammonia to the two quarts of shampoo, or a teaspoonful of salts of tartar. Either of these "softeners" is beneficial if used in small quantities, but decidedly harmful when used in too large proportion. Remember always that you must be very thorough in both the scrubbing and rinsing of the hair, and three times for the ending and rinsing is none too often.

Inquirer: A curling fluid which works nicely in the winter often fails entirely during the summer months. This is because the air is heavy with moisture in the hot weather and this takes the curl out of the hair quicker than you can put it in. Have you tried the fluid made from one dram gum arabic, one dram sugar and two ounces rosewater? It may prove better than the one you have been using. Crush the gum to a powder and put it, together with the sugar, in the rosewater, and let stand till dissolved and well blended. Moisten the hair with this fluid just before rolling it on curlers.

Vera: You can coax more roundness to your cheeks by giving them gentle massage every morning with a nourishing cream. Use plenty of cold water after the massage, as that is a good tonic. I doubt if the sage remedy will prove a cure for dandruff, and I wish you would use the tonic I so often recommended. I am sure it will relieve the condition of your scalp and stop the hair from falling.

New Color for Gloves.

"Elephant gray" is the new color for gloves. It has hitherto been known as "gun metal," but whatever its name it is a most serviceable shade, and its vogue is probably largely due to this. One firm is making a specialty of short kid gloves "for business women." These gloves come in three colors, tan, white and the new gray. They are rather heavy for the next few weeks' wear, but after that will prove a worth-while investment, for they are well made and of the best quality.

Ribbons Have Picot Edge.

Social Forms and Entertainments

Reply to "Shorty."

I should say you were a fine looking young girl with golden hair. You will have to study for yourself the most becoming way to dress your hair. I like the way you do it now and it is only a little while you can wear it that way, for girls grow into women so quickly. An occasional scrubbing with good soap will not hurt the teeth. A "Psyche" knot is a pulled out puff or knot placed half low and half high in the back and coronet braids are worn across the front of head with usually the hair parted. Norfolk suits of serge and one piece dresses of serge with white guimpes and undersleeves I like best for school, with long warm coats. I do not care for separate skirts and waists. You may wear any color you like and you will get over the blushing habit as you lose self-consciousness by thinking of others and not so much about yourself.

Girlie's Answers.

I fear you think your answer is coming in very late, but if you only knew how hard I tried to get around you would not blame me. Only just so many questions can be answered each week, so some one is always disappointed. I think girls of the age mentioned like "Thimble" parties and now is just the time to begin work on Christmas presents, so why not ask each one to come with a suggestion for that happy occasion? It is very easy to let your friend know that you like him by asking him "to come again" when he calls and inviting him to tea on Sunday night occasionally.

Your writing is very good and I think you did just right about asking the friend to come in. Serve your girls piping hot chocolate and nice little toasted crackers.

No Age Limit.

I have read your column for a long time—in fact it is the first thing I look for on Sunday and have become deeply interested in it. I want to ask you a few questions.

At what age is a woman called an old maid? and would you advise a young lady to marry a young man who is one year and five months younger than she if they love each other?—Mary J.

The difference in age is so slight I see no reason to let it prevent what would probably be a happy marriage. There is really no set time at which a woman becomes an "old maid," in fact we have no "old maids" these days.

Glad you like the department.

From "A City Girl."

You ask "Should I allow a boy to wear my ring?" "Yes," if you do not mind running the risk of his losing it and "No" if you do. I know it is customary for boys and girls to exchange rings, pins, etc. Class pins are usually replaceable and so are class or club rings, but I do not approve of loaning valuable rings that would be hard to duplicate and perhaps very expensive. From your handwriting I am afraid I should not consider you old enough for what you call "steady" company. I see no harm in having good boy friends nor in walking with them in the daytime. Without knowing more about you I should say you were attractive, just as all girls of seventeen should be.

Finger Bowl Etiquette.

Please answer in your columns whether it is always proper to use finger bowls at a dinner or luncheon. If so, should each guest be served with an individual bowl, or should one be passed around to each? Is it proper for a hostess to wear flowers?—M. E. P.

It is always proper to use finger bowls, but it is not always done, and a hostess commits no breach in etiquette in not doing so, unless fruit has been served. One should be provided for each guest, put on a plate which has a finger bowl doily upon it. A hostess may wear flowers if she is fortunate enough to have them.

Gifts Never Necessary.

I received an invitation to attend the wedding reception of a girl friend, who lives in another city. Is it necessary for me to send a gift? If so, shall I send gift to bride before the day of the reception?—Aneta.

Gifts are never necessary, but if you wish to give one to your friend send it to her before or after the reception, just which is most convenient for you. It is customary to send remembrances just as soon as the cards are out.

Reply to "Jeff's" Friends.

I am glad you like the department well enough to say so; I appreciate such kind words in its favor. I should have the linen shower in the afternoon, with just the most intimate friends of the bride-elect present. Present the gifts in a pretty ribbon and flower decorated basket and serve tea, sandwiches and small cakes.

Reply to "Christine."

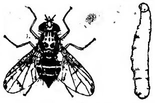
I think I can tell you where to get the contests you wish if you will send me a self-addressed, stamped envelope for name and address of books. In the department some time ago I had beautiful verses for a mother's birthday, but so far I have not come across anything for a father. Perhaps some of our readers have something, if so, I will ask them to send to me for publication in our column. Thanks for good wishes.

MADAME MERRI.

MEDITERRANEAN FRUIT FLY IS SERIOUS DRAWBACK TO SUCCESSFUL CULTIVATION

Considerable Interest in Very Destructive Insect Recently Aroused by Action of Department of Agriculture in Calling for Hearings on Advisability of Quarantine.



The Mediterranean Fruit Fly and Larva. (Greatly Magnified.)

The recent announcement of Secretary Wilson of the department of agriculture of his purpose to hold hearings for the purpose of determining the advisability of a quarantine against importations of plants, fruits or trees from countries where the Mediterranean fruit fly is known to exist, has aroused considerable interest in this very destructive insect, and there have been many demands on the department for information concerning it. To meet this demand Dr. L. O. Howard, chief of the bureau of entomology, has had prepared a circular—No. 160 of his bureau—of which A. L. Quaintance is the author.

That the Mediterranean fruit fly is a most serious drawback to the successful cultivation of fruit in the countries where it is established there can be no question. Indeed the cultivation of fruits is scarcely possible in the worst infested regions. The fruit-growing industry of Bermuda was practically destroyed many years ago by the introduction of the insect into that island. Its introduction into the United States in all probability would be calamitous to the orchard interests of our more southern states and of California in which regions it would find conditions very similar to those in countries where it now exists in most destructive numbers. By the establishment of a strict quarantine such as proposed by the secretary, it is believed that it will be possible to prevent disaster to the American fruit industry.

The greatest amount of damage is done to the ripening fruit by the female, which, with her sharp ovipositor, pierces the fruit and deposits the small glistening white eggs just underneath the skin. These hatch in a very short time, two to four days to midsummer. Their development, however, depends upon the ripeness of fruit—in all probability if the fruit is green, the eggs will not hatch. The larvae or "maggots" when hatched at once begin to feed on the pulp of the fruit. In apricots they make straight for the center; in peaches and other fruits they are more inclined to work out in different directions. When fully developed, which usually requires a fortnight or three weeks, they leave the fruit, which has previously fallen, and enter the ground. Here they soon change to the pupal stage, and remain for 12 days to three weeks, when they become transformed into a fly, completing one generation.

The governments of certain countries have put in force regulations for the enforced control of fruit flies, and in each instance the principle followed has been the inspection of orchards and cleaning up and destruction of all fallen fruit. At the present time the United States authorities are experimenting with the "poison-bait" method of controlling the insect, similar to that tried in South Africa. In that case the bait consisted of a solution of five gallons of molasses, one pound of arsenate of lead and 25 gallons of water. This was used in the form of a spray evenly distributed over the trees, bushes, prickly pears, etc. Not only were thousands of the flies prevented from reaching maturity, but the deposition of eggs in the fruit already ripening was almost completely stopped. The fruit on all the late varieties of treated trees ripened perfectly, and was sold on the market and guaranteed free from the maggots. On the trees that were not sprayed the situation was just the reverse, almost every ripe fruit being infested by maggots ranging from newly hatched to fully developed. The pupa were also present under some of the decaying peaches, and there were numerous flies flitting about the trees. The poisoned-bait method of controlling the fly appears entirely feasible in this country, especially in more or less arid regions, where the spray cannot be washed off by rains, and is not otherwise disturbed.

GRAPES NOT HURT BY HONEY BEES

Busy Little Workers Never Puncture Skin of Luscious Fruit, Says Expert.

There are some subjects on which it is impossible to convince our older farmers and fruit growers that their inherited notions are at fault. No amount of scientific assertion and demonstration by the highest authorities avail to change their opinions or to make them hesitate to assert and reassert them in their communications to agricultural journals and in meetings of societies where such questions are discussed.

One of these is that under certain climatic or other conditions wheat seed is transformed to chess seed; and another—much vouched for at this season—is that bees are injurious to grapes, says a writer in the Farm Progress.

Again and again have the most careful observers announced in lectures and published horticultural journals, that they had never seen a honey bee cut the skin of a ripe grape or of any other fruit.

Of course, it was freely admitted that bees were often seen sipping the juices of grapes that had been pecked by birds or clipped by the sharp jaws of wasps and other insects; and in this they do no harm, for a punctured or injured grape is of no further value to the vineyardist.

In an endeavor to settle this matter beyond dispute, Dr. Riley, while entomologist of the Department of Agriculture, authorized one of his assistants to investigate the matter thoroughly; and to do this a portion of a grape trellis with bearing vines enclosed in the most secure manner under a wire screened tent of considerable size, together with a hive of bees, with sufficient honey for their sustenance. As the grapes ripened the clusters were under almost constant inspection during the daylight hours, and, though the bees buzzed about them, never, once during a period of several weeks was a bee seen to cut a grape, though when some were partly crushed by the attendant, the bees were eager for a sip of the fresh juice.

It would seem that nothing could be more conclusive for the exculpation of the bees from the charge of being depredators in vineyards, backed, as it is, by many other observations on the actions of bees in the open, and yet the same charge is made, year after year, by grape growers who experience loss in having their clusters mutilated, and who seem determined to consider the harmless bees as the principal source of the trouble.

FERTILIZER FOR GREENHOUSE USE

Many Weed Seeds and Disease Germs Contained in Ordinary Stable Manure.

The use of rotted stable manure as a source of greenhouse plant food has been the custom for so many years that more effective forms of plant food make headway slowly; yet the rotted stable manure has many disadvantages. It always contains more or less weed seeds as well as disease germs, and it supplies plant food in available form very irregularly.

Also by fermentation it materially influences the temperature of the seed bed, a temperature we have no means of regulating. The ammonia it contains is not nitrated, hence for forcing it cannot be safely relied upon. For greenhouse work the fertilizer chemicals should be used, such as nitrate of soda, acid phosphate, and sulphate of potash. They should always be used in such proportions that 100 pounds of ammoniate nitrogen are always accompanied by 30 pounds of phosphoric acid and 70 pounds of actual potash.

The quantity to be applied should correspond to about three-fourths of an ounce of ammoniate nitrogen per square yard of surface, that is, to each yard of bench use about five ounces of nitrate of soda, three ounces of acid phosphate and two ounces of sulphate of potash. A mixture of these proportions may be dissolved in water and applied in small proportions every few days, taking care, however, to cease applications with those plants it is desired to fully mature as soon as the desired growth is made.

Good Pasture Requirement.

Time was when the hogs were supposed to have had excellent care when they had all the grain and slop they wanted in an 8x10 pen. Nowadays a good pasture of clover, alfalfa or rape is considered an indispensable adjunct in the hog raising business by all farmers who are interested in economical pork production.

The Boston Fern.

To have the best success with the Boston fern, give it a specially prepared soil. Prepare a potting soil of equal parts of sandy loam, leaf-mold and well-rotted horse manure. Mix thoroughly, and add a sprinkling of coarse bone meal. When the plants come, soak the roots well, and pot them as deep only as they were before. Keep well watered, and in a partly shaded situation—in summer on a porch is the ideal place. When a new leaf shoots up, cut off at once the one that dies. The best varieties of the Boston fern are the Exaltata, Cordata and Piersonii. Keep free from dust and mealy bug.

Boiled Potatoes.

Soil for Currants.

Currants do best on heavy clay loam or upon lighter soil well mulched.

NEITHER HAYSEED NOR ANGEL

But There Need Be Little Question That Young Lady Had Much Ingenuity.

Across the line on the Kansas side where the study of agriculture is compulsory, one of the high school girls took home her monthly report card and proudly announced:

"I took the highest grade in the class in history, English literature and German."

"That's all very well," replied her father, critically examining the card, "but how about this grade to agriculture?"

"Oh, well," explained the daughter, "I'm on hayseed!"

"And how do you account for this grade in deportment?" he inquired.

"I'm no bloomin' angel, either," she replied.—Kansas City Star.

DANDRUFF COVERED SCALP

3002 Cass St., St. Louis, Mo.—"For five years I suffered with itching of my body and scalp. My trouble began with a rash on my lower limbs which was very annoying, and my scalp was literally covered with dandruff. My hair used to come out by the handfuls and the itching of my body and scalp was terrible. I had used almost all the skin remedies on the market with no results, when I wrote for a little Cuticura Soap and Ointment and it gave me instant relief. Within one month's use of the Cuticura Soap and Ointment I was entirely cured. I cannot discover one strand of my hair coming out and I have not lost a minute of sleep since using the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, which entirely cured me of itching of my body and scalp in its worst form. I also find the Cuticura Soap a benefit in shaving." (Signed) Charles Judlin, Dec. 8, 1911.

Too Much of a Good Thing.

"I was very happy," said the professor, "when, after years of wooing, she finally said 'Yes.'"

"But why did you break the engagement so soon after?" asked his friend.

"Man, it was she that dissolved it."

"Really?" said the friend. "How did that happen?"

"It was due to my accursed absent-mindedness. When, a few days later, I called at her home I again asked her to marry me."—Youth's Companion.

ABOUT PEOPLE AND PLACES

Wilson—that's all.

—o—

The silent voter became articulate.

—o—

Election officials earned their pay this year.

—o—

The tariff scare was bound to fall of large results.

—o—

Mr. F. D. Malin carried his own ward, ward one of this city, by a vote of almost two to one over Dr. Winans.

—o—

Mr. E. Boughton of the South End, has purchased the Jas. Whitney place on Marion avenue, and moved into it last week.

—o—

Mr. E. D. Warren, democratic candidate for clerk, carried his home village, Fairport, over J. R. Williams, republican, by a nice majority.

—o—

No one got excited on election day in Painesville. The Bull Moose were active, the Republicans a little glum, and the Democrats contented and confident.

—o—

The president failed to get out his Thanksgiving proclamation before election this year. It will come this week, and there is all the more to be thankful for.

—o—

Wm. Gordon, democrat congressman from the 20th district pleases the democratic voters of Lake county as much as any single thing next to the election of Wilson.

—o—

Attorney G. W. Alvord wears a broad smile these days. He tells his republican friends that it is a smile that he has been twenty years wanting to smile. No one would blame him if he smiled out loud.

—o—

Matt Dickey of Mentor, C. A. Rush of Wickliffe, Frank Carver of Painesville township and L. Ryan of Willoughby, were in the city Wednesday and all wore that expressive smile which indicates their politics.

—o—

The republican and progressive combined vote in Ward 2, Precinct A, was 176 votes. G. E. Stevenson, one of the republican candidates for county commissioner received in that precinct just 173 votes. He must be solid with both branches of what was the Republican party.

—o—

Hon. F. D. Malin was not elected and he seems to care less about it than does his friends. The democratic party in the county was and is united and in the new alignment that is sure to come the party stands to gain and will cut an important figure in county affairs. The party owes much to the leadership of Mr. Malin.

A [illegible] home wedding was celebrated at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Robinson, 122 South [illegible], Wednesday morning [illegible] Miss Gladys Amy [illegible] E. Lee Howard, and was most beautiful as well as impressive. Only the members of the family and a few intimate friends were present. The bride was tastefully gowned in a macrame embroidered lace over white silk trimmed in pearls, and carried bride's roses. She was attended by Miss Georgia K. Roddick as bridesmaid, and Mr. Lewis McClellan of Cleveland officiated as best man.

The house was tastefully decorated for the occasion in pinks, roses, ferns and potted plants.

A wedding breakfast followed the ceremony, which was both elaborate and tasteful. An hour passed in congratulations, merriment, toasting and rice throwing.

The happy couple departed via the Lake Shore R. R. at noon for their future home in a beautiful suburb of Pittsburg, where a new house, furnished throughout, awaits the blissful pair.

A large number of handsome and useful wedding presents were among the tributes of affection received by the bride.

An Example of Civic Improvement

Mowrystown, Ohio, a village of about 300 inhabitants, presents an excellent example of what can be done in the way of civic improvement. Five years ago the place was a run-down country village, similar to hundreds of others of the same size. Streets and sidewalks were unimproved, alleys were filled with trash, vacant lots were growing up in weeds and there was an apparent lack of civic pride. A number of the live business men decided to "clean up the town." They interested others and the result has been that today Mowrystown has four miles of cement sidewalks, streets are improved, alleys are kept clean, vacant lots mowed and the appearance of the village has become a source of pride to the people who live there.

PROGRESSIVES JUST STARTED'
—DIXON.

T. R.'s Manager Says Fight Will Go On.

New York, Nov. 6.—Senator Joseph M. Dixon, progressive national chairman, issued the following statement at midnight:

"The election returns tonight show that more than 4,000,000 voters have enlisted under the banner of the progressive party. They have enlisted for the war.

"The result of today's balloting makes the progressive party the dominant opponent of the democratic party. Today the late republican party becomes the third party in American politics.

"The realignment of the voters has become an accomplished fact. We are going forward with our plans to complete our organization for the congressional election two years from now.

"I have issued a call for the progressive national committee to meet at Chicago Tuesday, Dec. 10, inviting also all chairmen of state committees, the progressive candidates for governor at today's elections and prominent progressive leaders. We expect to maintain permanent headquarters during the coming four years."

DEMOCRATS TO RULE ASSEMBLY

Cox Will Have Legislatule of Own Party.

Columbus, O., Nov. 8.—Gov.-elect James M. Cox will have behind him a legislature that will be overwhelmingly democratic in both branches and which will be pledged to a program that calls for more than 20 big progressive reform measures.

According to the latest returns the senate will consist of at least 24 democrats out of a total membership of 33, and the number of democrats may be increased by three or four more.

In the house it is agreed the democrats will have between 70 and 80 out of the 123 members.

Bigelow to Elected

One of the notable figures in the next house will likely be H. S. Bigelow of Cincinnati, president of the recent constitutional convention. Bigelow will be a candidate for speaker and will have the backing of the democratic state administration and state organization.

ELECT GORDON

Good Majority for Democratic Congressional Candidate

Gordon ran nearly twice as well in the city as his bull moose opponent, Frank Woods. Woods, however, carried Lake and Medina counties. The rural districts of Cuyahoga-co also were expected to cut down Gordon's plurality. Paul Howland, present congressman, running on the republican ticket, was about 2000 behind Woods in 180 precincts.

In the twentieth district, 177 precincts at 10 a. m. gave Gordon 15,270 Woods, progressive, 6000, Howland, republican, 8402, Willert, socialist, 3547.

KEEP UP FIGHT, SAYS GARFIELD

Bull Moose Lieutenant Says Party Won't Quit

Echoing the words of the defeated bull moose chief at Oyster Bay, simultaneously with his telegram of congratulation to Gov. Wilson, James R. Garfield late Tuesday night declared the third party's fight had just begun.

"One defeat doesn't mean the downfall of the party by any means," said Garfield. "Our plans for other campaigns will go on as if nothing had happened. Roosevelt's strong run in Cuyahoga-co is most gratifying to me."

ELECTION RETURNS

The Herald had a special wire and received election returns from the country at large, and local returns were brought or telephoned to the office. The Herald held "open house" and hundreds gathered to hear the news. The cheering and laughter of this occasion was in marked contrast to the gloom of four, eight and twelve years ago.

SUFFRAGETS WIN 4 STATES

Wisconsin Goes Against Votes for Women.

New York, Nov. 6.—Advocates of women's suffrage were delirious with joy today. Four out of five states voting carried yesterday for amendments striking the word male out of the state constitutions.

Wisconsin rejected suffrage yesterday. Four approved, Arizona, Oregon, Kansas, and Michigan, bringing the total of states where women are enfranchised up to 10. The election of William Sulzer as governor of New York, gives the Empire state suffragets a friend at the "cause" at Albany.

CHARLES T. RADCLIFFE

Highly Respected Business Man Died Last Sunday.

Very few citizens in Lake county are better known and few if any have more friends than had Chas. T. Radcliffe, who died in Painesville last Sunday.

Lake county people and particularly Painesville people will miss Mr. Radcliffe. He had a kindly way that won him many friends. His consideration for others was shown in many ways, even in business affairs his greatest aim was to please. Through a long business career his honesty and good intentions were never questioned.

Mr. Radcliffe was born 56 years ago, January 12, 1856, at Leroy, and had made his home in this vicinity his entire lifetime. He was identified with the Uniform Rank, K. of P., Grand River lodge, and frequently held high offices in the order. He was also a member of the Woodman and Maccabee lodges. In a business way he was engaged in the meat, flour and feed and grocery business for several years in the store rooms now occupied by L. T. Curtis and the Cleveland Trust Co. Of late years he had been engaged in the bakery business known as The Radcliffe with his son, David W. Radcliffe. His business career in Painesville extended over a period of 35 years.

Besides a wife, Mr. Radcliffe is survived by a son, David W. Radcliffe and a daughter, Mrs. B. C. Deeley of Mt. Vernon, O., who was unable to come to Painesville on account of illness.

The funeral services were held Tuesday morning at 10:30 from the residence of his son, David W. Radcliffe, South State street.

In Ashtabula County When Progressive Help. Dr. King for Representative

Ashtabula county, the home of Giddings and Wade, for years regarded as the staunchest Republican stronghold in the state, for the first time in half a century has gone Democratic. Unofficial complete returns tonight show that all but three of the county offices will go to Democrats.

Representative, Dr. W. S. King, of Ashtabula; auditor, A. R. Beckwith, of Jefferson; prosecutor, D. F. Dunlavey of Ashtabula; clerk of courts, J. C. Cherry; sheriff, T. D. Herrick, Jefferson; commissioners, P. H. Hagoney, Ashtabula, P. A. Wilson, Conneaut.

The three Republicans who pulled through are J. A. Cornell, a G. A. R. man, who was elected recorder; W. H. Dodge, was re-elected treasurer, and R. C. Young, commissioner.

The Possibilities of Country Schools

People are beginning to wake up to the advantages of country life, and yet the country school problem is a great problem to those who have children to educate. Parents move to the city and often give up what they would prefer to do for themselves because the schools are better there and they want their children to get the best possible start in life. But on the other hand we find city people moving to the country for the health of their children, the good air, the contact with nature, the more natural surroundings. A nervous or an anaemic child is far better off in the country. And just as the over-excitement of city life is too much for some people, driving them into all sorts of abnormal and nervous conditions, so the intensity of large, over-crowded schools is often bad for highly strung, delicately organized children.

The small school is having very much said in its favor to these days. Even colleges which have become very popular, numbering up into the thousands are being shunned by some wise parents as too large to afford the best opportunities for young people. So great is this tendency back to Nature and more natural surroundings that we have such examples of schools for boys as the Adirondack-Florida school, where a limited number of boys pursue their studies in the spring and fall up in the woods of the Adirondacks at a delightful camp, and in the winter down south by the ocean where their recreation consists largely in sailing and tennis. This is a very expensive school, of course, but there is another for poorer boys, at Interlachen, Indiana, where the plan of the directors is to keep the boys out-of-doors on the farm as much as possible, illustrating the principles which they learn in books by actual practice work on the soil and in the construction of buildings. These two examples, taken from a number of similar character, simply show the value which is now being placed upon the country as the natural spot for boys and girls to grow up in.

And yet we have the fact to face that our country schools are so far behind what is provided in the larger centers that intelligent parents hesitate over the question of living in the country. Why should this be? Should we be obliged to go to the city for the best Nature study, for example, when the real fields and woods and birds and flowers are in the country? Should we be forced to go to the city for the best instruction in agriculture by teachers living in town and not near a farm? Should we throw away our natural asset of fresh air and plenty of room for playgrounds in the country and at great expense substitute for it a school on the roof of some building in a crowded city and a pitiful backyard scarcely large enough for a game of baseball? The truth is country people are not valuing sufficiently what they possess. With a very little more thought and a very little more expense country schools could be made so attractive that sensible parents would not think of moving to the city for that reason alone, and city parents would seriously consider staying in the country all the year ground.

There are some encouraging things to be noted in Lake county. To know that there is at least one superintendent who has made a beginning at changing conditions and studying the situation in relation to the special needs of his community is encouraging. To run across one teacher in a rural district who has the nests of the various birds arranged in her school room with labels and secures a bird enthusiast to come in the spring and give a talk to the children is encouraging. To find a rural school where one of the wealthy city residents takes pains to visit the school, to provide new and suitable seats and to drill a well for pure water is encouraging. But so much more might be done with very little more expenditure! What would it require? Intelligence about educational matters and what is being done in other places; a little ingenuity and the ability to adapt ideas to the needs of a special locality; efficiency in planning and executing; enthusiasm over the possibilities of the country. The latter is the most important of all. With the same buildings, the same children, the same parents, the same local conditions, the same teachers, there could be in many districts a wonderful change for the better if there were a little expenditure in injecting enthusiasm into parents, school boards, teachers and children over the possibilities of our country-sides.

LAURA H. WILD,
Lake Erie College.

Farmers Institutes

To the Teachers of Ohio:

When your Supervisor of Agricultural education visits you, he will desire to see a natural and enthusiastic teacher, perfectly at ease in the presence of the school.

Visitors should always be welcome and made to feel perfectly at home in the school house.

The Supervisor will like to listen to a recitation in Agriculture or the Household arts. If this recitation is not scheduled during his visit, the teacher should arrange to dismiss whatever class is reciting and call the Agricultural class. The pupils should be given the opportunity of questioning the Supervisor concerning the different phases of this work. [illegible] buildings that are a credit to the district; pupils and teacher neat and clean. Also curtains for the windows of the school house and well chosen pictures on the walls.

Boards of Education and teachers should remember that Agriculture is a required branch for the elementary school and the Supervisor of Agriculture expects to find every boy and girl studying this most important branch. An exhibit of work done by the pupils is very inspiring to the visitors and also to the pupils that have taken a part in the preparation of this exhibit.

A literary society is a very helpful organization in any school and the Supervisor of Agriculture would be pleased to meet the officers of this society when visiting your school.

During the winter months the teacher would find a great opportunity in teaching Agriculture by inviting the young men and ladies of the neighborhood to [illegible] the school house for part of each day. Try it and note the results of your efforts.

Bulletins from experimental stations and the United States Department of Agriculture may be had by any teacher free of charge. The Supervisor of Agriculture would like to have you write for these bulletins, maps and reports.

Remember that the Supervisor of Agriculture is at your service when he visits you. You should see that he discusses Agriculture with your classes.

The Supervisor of Agriculture desires to see an up-to-date teacher that has the daily program arranged in such a way that not more than twenty-five recitations appear in the daily program. He reports the conditions of your school to the State Commissioner of Common Schools and will make this report out in your presence if you so desire. [illegible]

SUICIDE OF J. A. WAYLAND

Publisher of Appeal to Reason Said to Have Been Despondent

J. A. Wayland, owner of Appeal to Reason, a socialist paper at Girard, Kan., shot and killed himself Sunday night at his home in that city, according to a telephone message received at Kansas City yesterday morning. So far as known Wayland left no word explaining his action, but it was said by Fred Warren, editor of the Appeal, that Wayland had been despondent for several days. It was said that Wayland had been worrying over the possible action of a federal grand jury to be held at Fort Scott next week, before which it was expected charges would be placed against Wayland and Warren of sending objectionable matter through the mails.

The Appeal to Reason has been the recognized organ of the Socialist Party for many years and Mr. Wayland was an organizer of wonderful ability. The paper has had a circulation of 500,000 per week and at one time 500 copies were sent into Lake County weekly.

Hog Cholera

Editor Herald:

Hog Cholera is a highly contagious and infectious disease which continues to menace a great industry in which a vast amount of money is invested by swine breeders and farmers. Through its bureau of animal industry the U. S. department of agriculture is taking an active part in the efforts to suppress this plague among hogs and recommends and urges the use of Hog cholera serum as the best means to protect your hogs, prevent the spread and effect a cure among those in the initial stage of the disease.

Prompt and concerted action by veterinarians and hog owners should result in confining the disease to the herd when it first appears.

Failure to report sickness on the part of the owner results in great loss to himself as well as his neighbor, through the possibility of infection being carried by birds, dogs, attendants, etc.

If all hog raisers and breeders of Lake county will bear this in mind and co-operate with each other and through the state through their veterinarian and will protect with Hog Cholera Serum.

Epizootics of hog cholera may be controlled and possibly in time entirely eradicated thus saving much labor and expense, hence profoundly influencing the swine industry throughout the county.

Parcels Post

Preparatory to the installation of the parcels post on Jan. 1, the official daily bulletins sent out to postmasters last week, issued the first instructions regarding the innovation. The suggestion is made that the public be instructed concerning the workings of the new method of handling fourth-class matter.

First, that the parcels post requires a stamp of its own and mail matter sent fourth-class after Jan. 1, 1913, will be held for postage if ordinary stamps are used. That mail for parcels post will be accepted only at the postoffices, branch postoffices, lettered and numbered sub-stations, and such other numbered stations as may be designated by the postmaster. That all matter must bear the return card of the sender.

Postmasters will soon be furnished with copies of the official parcels post map, showing the unit of area in which his office is located, and the eight zones indicating the distance of which rates are passed. Copies of this guide will be furnished every postoffice in the country.

The increase in the weight of mail matter from 4 to 11 pounds, will call for different scale equipment in many localities. Six-foot tape lines will be used to determine the girth of articles mailed.

FOR SALE—Two half Percheron colts, black, half brothers, six months old. Three-fourth mile east of Unionville on South Ridge. F. F. Upton.

WORK OF THE BLIND

Unique Experiment by the State

Next week a special exhibition of articles made by blind home workers is to be held under the auspices of the Ohio Commission for the Blind in the Gail G. Grant Company's store.

Under the direction of six, totally blind home teachers, over three hundred blind women of Ohio are being helped through industrial employment to bear the greatest burden of blindness, enforced idleness which blindness so frequently involves.

Ohio stands first in the country in its efforts to relieve the conditions of its blind citizens through its pension law to the needy blind, through its State Commission for the industrial employment of the adult blind and the prevention of unnecessary blindness, and through its State School for the Blind Children and Youth.

The Ohio Commission for the Blind, through its Homeworkers Guild, employs and supervises the work of blind girls and women in their own homes, sewing, knitting and crocheting, in the making of salable articles for household use. The Commission furnishes the material and directions for making, sends the blind teacher when instructions are necessary and pays expenses and postage for transportation of material and of the finished products. The blind home worker is paid for her work as soon as the article is finished, an amount which represents the entire difference between the cost of the raw material and the selling price.

The state and Gail G. Grant store are cooperating to give these blind home workers an opportunity to earn at least something toward their support and it is earnestly to be hoped that the public spirited citizens of Painesville will do their part to make this exhibition and sale the success it deserves to be.

Evolution

When you were a tadpole and I was a fish,
In the Paleozoic time,
And side by side on the ebbing tide
We sprawled through the ooze and slime,
Or skittered with many a caudal flip
Through the depths of the Cambrian fen,
My heart was rife with the joy of life,
For I loved you even then.

Mindless we lived and mindless we loved,
And mindless at last we died;
And deep in a rift of the Caradoc drift
We slumbered side by side.
The world turned on in the lathe of time,
The hot lands heaved amain,
Till we caught our breath from the womb of death,
And crept into light again.

We were Amphibians, scaled and tailed,
And drab as a dead man's hand;
We coiled at ease 'neath the dripping trees,
Or trailed through the mud and sand,
Croaking and blind, with our three-clawed feet
Writing a language dumb,
With never a spark in the empty dark
To hint at a life to come.

Yet happy we lived, and happy we loved,
And happy we died once more;
Our forms were rolled in the clinging mold
Of a Neocomian shore.
The eons came, and the eons fled,
And the sleep that wrapped us fast
Was riven away in a newer day,
And the night of death was past.

Then light and swift through the jungle trees
We swung in our airy flights,
Or breathed in the balms of the fronded palms,
In the hush of the moonless nights.
And oh, what beautiful years were these,
When our hearts clung each to each,
When life was filled, and our senses thrilled
In the first faint dawn of speech.

Thus life by life, and love by love,
We passed through the cycles strange,
And breath by breath, and death by death,
We followed the chain of change.
Till there came a time in the law of life
When over the nursing sod
The shadows broke, and the soul awoke
In a strange, dim dream of God.

I was thewed like an Auroch bull,
And tusked like the great Cave Bear,
And you, my sweet, from head to feet
Were gowned in your glorious hair.
Deep in the gloom of a fireless tomb,
When the night fell o'er the plain,
And the moon hung red o'er the river bed,
We mumbled the bones of the slain.

I flaked a flint to a cutting edge,
And shaped it with brutish craft,
I broke a shank from the woodland dank,
And fitted it, head and haft.
Then I hid me close to the reedy tarn
Where the Mammoth came to drink,—
Through brawn and bone I drave the stone,
And slew him upon the brink.

Loud I howled through the moonlit wastes,
Loud answered our kith and kin;
From west and east to the crimson feast
The clan came trooping in.
O'er joint and gristle and padded hoof,
We fought, and clawed and tore,
And cheek by jowl, with many a growl,
We talked the marvel o'er.

I carved that fight on a reindeer bone
With rude and hairy hand,
I pictured his fall on the cavern wall
That men might understand.
For we lived by blood, and the right of might,
Ere human laws were drawn,
And the age of sin did not begin
Till our brutal tusks were gone.

And that was a million years ago,
In a time that no man knows,
Yet here tonight in the mellow light,
We sit at Delmonico's;
Your eyes are deep as the Devon springs,
Your hair is as dark as jet,
Your years are few, your life is new,
Your soul untried, and yet—

Our trail is on the Kimmeridge clay,
And the scarp of the Purbeck flags;
And deep in the Caroline crags;
And death shall come amain;
Should it come today, what man may say
We shall not live again?

God wrought our souls from the Tremadoc beds
And furnished them wings to fly;
He sowed our spawn in the world's dim dawn,
And I know that it shall not die,
Though cities have sprung above the graves
Where the crooked-boned men made war,
And the ox-wain creaks o'er the buried caves,
Where the mummied mammoths are.

Then as we linger at luncheon here
O'er many a dainty dish,
Let us drink anew to the time when you
Were a tadpole and I was a fish.

OFFICIAL REPORT

Of the Ohio Department of Agriculture on the Condition of Crops November 1, 1912

In the official October report issued by this Department mention was made of the fact that many correspondents reported a small wheat acreage being seeded. The figures contained in this report show that in comparison with the original area seeded for the 1912 harvest the present acreage is but 94 per cent. However, 44 per cent of the wheat area sown last year was abandoned in the spring, and but 1,979,894 acres remained for the harvest just past. The present estimated area seeded for the 1913 harvest is reported at 1,869,656 acres. Much of the wheat was sown late, but it growing condition generally is excellent. The state average is estimated at 98 per cent.

Alfalfa figures show an average production of three tons per acre, with an estimated production for the state as a whole of 88,211 tons. This is a substantial increase over the production of last year.

The area seeded to rye shows an increase of 10 per cent in comparison with the area of last year as reported by township assessors. Its growing condition is the same as wheat 98 per cent.

Corn prospects are excellent. The estimated acreage planted is 3,197,884 acres. From present prospects this should produce approximately 112,000,000 bushels. Favorable weather has prevailed during the fall and cribbing is in progress with the crop in fine condition.

For the first time in the Department's history figures are presented herein reference to sugar beets. The report shows that the total estimated production for 1912 was 81,343 tons. This is a decline of eight per cent in comparison with the production of 1911.

While the potato area is considerable less than last year, the average production per acre exceeds that crop by fifty bushels. The total state production is estimated at 11,604,902 bushels. On the corresponding date one year ago the state production was estimated at 8,161,203 bushels. The present average production per acre is 112 bushels.

Hogs are being rushed to market owing to prevalence of cholera, and this, in conjunction with the scarcity of feeding cattle will cause an unusual amount of corn to be marketed early.

Cost of Producing Milk

The people who complain about the high price of milk, may be interested in knowing what it costs to produce and distribute marketable milk. An investigation made last year by the College of Agriculture, Ohio State University, shows that the actual cost of producing a gallon of milk in Ohio is about 25 cents, or 6.25 cents per quart, allowing 3200 pounds per cow per year as the average milk production.

This takes into consideration the cost of feeds, labor, interest on investment, maintenance, insurance, taxes, etc. When the average milk production per cow is increased, the cost is decreased. The average cost of distribution is 3½ cents per quart, making a total of 9.75 cents per qt. as the cost of producing milk and delivering it to the consumer. This means that when milk retails high as 10 cents per quart, the average producer and distributer is making little or no profit in the transaction.

When high producing cows are kept, and economic methods of handling and distributing on a large scale are employed the above figures are greatly reduced and there is a fair profit in the dairy business. However it is the average producer who keeps average cows, the increasing cost of feeds and labor, and the greater demand for sanitary conditions that are contributing to the high cost of milk.

A Gotham judge has ruled that no court can prevent a woman from worrying her husband. A judicial ruling wasn't necessary to establish the fact, however.

Onion skin labels are being used by customs officials to prevent fraud through their being changed from one piece of baggage to another. "You may change, you may alter the stamp if you will, but the odor of onion will cling to it still."

There is still a chance for ultimate fame for the individual not blessed with literary art. A love letter, a toothache cure, and a complaint against poor boarding house fare have just been translated from inscriptions on Babylon brick.

What Congress May Do.

New York City.—President-elect Woodrow Wilson, according to authenticated statements made here, has determined upon his course so far as are concerned the earliest moves of his term in office. According to these statements this will be the program for the opening of the Sixty-third congress. There will be an extra session of congress to enact into law the party's pledges for a downward revision of many schedules of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. Champ Clark of Missouri will be re-elected speaker of the house of representatives and Oscar W. Underwood of Alabama will retain the majority leadership and the chairmanship of the ways and means committee, which will draft the new tariff bill.

Girl Rolls Peanut With Nose.

Cincinnati, O.—Miss Myrtle Heys, a popular society girl and antifraget of Addison, a suburb of this city, intensely interested in the presidential election and the re-election of President Taft, paid an election wager in a fashion that caused no end of merriment to the public of that small city when she rolled a peanut through the city's leading thoroughfare with her nose, while a brass band which had volunteered its services paraded ahead, playing the tune: "When Teddy Came Marching Home."

Seven to Hang in One Day.

Salem, Ore.—Since the voters of Oregon have decided to retain the institution of capital punishment, the state officials have set Friday, Dec. 13, as the day upon which seven condemned men will swing on the gallows.

Gov. West, while expressing his disappointment that his measure for the abolition of capital punishment has failed of its passage, stated that he would go ahead with the hangings, as such is evidently the will of the people.

The vessel will be used by the Cleveland & Buffalo Transit Co. after June 15 next, on the route between Cleveland and Buffalo. Miss Eleanor Moodey of Painesville, O., christened the ship the "See-and-Bee," the name which the transit company selected out of more than 1,500 suggested by many persons. Name of boat was kept a secret until ship left the ways.

Man Shot at Wedding Party.

Kenton, O.—While a party of 25 young men were "belling" Mr. and Mrs. Guy Garner, a newly married couple, at the Gates home, five miles north of this city, a rifle was fired from an upstairs window, the bullet striking Emmet Kiansar, 20, and inflicting a serious wound in the thigh.

It is said that the shot was fired in an effort to frighten away the noisemakers, most of whom were assembled directly about the house, while Kiansar was standing in the roadway.

SPAIN'S PREMIER IS ASSASSINATED

JOSE CANALEJAS Y MENDES SHOT WHILE ON HIS WAY TO THE MINISTRY.

SLAYER TAKES OWN LIFE

Police Jail Many Well Known Anarchists, Hoping to Find Among Them the Leaders Who Inspired Murder.

Madrid, Spain.—Practically every well known anarchist in Madrid and several in other cities in Spain are under arrest, the police hoping to find among them the leaders who inspired the assassination of Premier Jose Canalejas y Mendes.

The assassin, Manuel Pardinas Serrato, after shooting himself, was immediately conveyed to the nearest first aid depot. The bullet had lodged in his right temple. No important document was found on him. He expired at 12:30 o'clock without making a declaration of any kind. His appearance was that of a workman in good position. It is supposed he had been following Canalejas some time.

Assassination Most Sensational.

The assassination of the premier was sensational in the dexterous manner in which the apparently well laid plan was executed. The shooting occurred just before noon in front of the office of the ministry of the interior, fronting on the Puerto Del Sol or Gate of the Sun, a big square in the center of Madrid, the busiest spot in the city. The scene in this square was particularly animated at this hour. There was the usual sizeable crowd on hand to see the ministers as they passed on their way to their meeting. Loaded mules passed continually through the square and the cafes which line the Puerto were doing a rushing business. Senor Canalejas drove to the curb in his carriage, alighted from the vehicle and, after returning the friendly salutations of the crowd, stepped briskly toward the ministry, where a cabinet meeting was about to begin. Half way across the sidewalk the assassin stepped up behind him, slightly to the right, and pointed a pistol point blank at the premier's head. He took aim so quickly that no outcry was heard until he had fired two shots in rapid succession. The premier collapsed instantly.

Confusion Follows Shooting.

The square was immediately a scene of great confusion. Packed at the time of the shooting it now became a veritable crush. Serrato was quickly seized and hustled away. The crowd turned its attention to the prostrate body on the sidewalk. Policemen came running from every direction drawing their revolvers or cutlasses. Dozens of civil guards, a kind of military police, poured out of the ministry of the interior, fixing their bayonets or slipping cartridges into their rifles as they came. For several minutes there was pandemonium. The police undertook to drive the throng out of the Puerto but another mob fought to get in to find out what the cause of the excitement was. The cafes emptied struggling mobs into the melee, the frightened mules added their braying to the tumult. Temporary order was not restored until a detachment of cavalry appeared on the scene. The premier's body in the meantime had been hurriedly carried into the ministry of the interior. The physicians declared he had died instantly.

Foreign Minister Prieto was appointed to act as premier until a permanent selection could be made.

The assassin was a slight man, 30 years of age, and a native of El Grado, province of Huesca. He recently returned here from Buenos Ayres. He had attracted considerable local attention by his oft-expressed hatred of the government, but he was never considered dangerous.

Formed Cabinet in 1910.

Senor Jose Canalejas was selected to form the Spanish cabinet in February, 1910. He was leader of the Monarchical Democratic party, which came into power on the resignation of the Liberal cabinet headed by Senor Moret y Prendergast. Senor Canalejas, who belonged to a wealthy and prominent family, came to the front in political life only in 1900, when he took a leading part in the campaign against clericalism. He had, however, taken great interest in politics as a student and public speaker for many years before that. At the age of 25 he became a member of the Spanish party, attaching himself to the advanced Liberal section. He became a member of Premier Sagasta's cabinet in 1902 as minister of agriculture. He introduced many reforms, especially in regard to the working classes and eventually created a department of labor.

When he was asked in February, 1910, by King Alfonso, to form a ministry the request caused a great sensation, as it was the first time in the history of Spain that an advanced radical had been placed at the head of the ministry. His cabinet has since undergone many changes, but he has always retained the leading place. He had much to do with the signing of the agreement between Spain and France on the question of the future of Morocco, which was recently satisfactorily settled.

Schrank Pleads Guilty.

Milwaukee, Wis.—John Schrank pleaded guilty of attempting to murder Theodore Roosevelt, and in his plea he sought to distinguish between an assault on Roosevelt as a "menace" and an attack on Roosevelt as a citizen. Municipal Judge A. C. Backus announced that he would later name a commission to examine Schrank's mental condition.

"How do you plead to this charge?" the prosecutor asked.

"Why, guilty," replied Schrank, the prisoner.

Baptist Bibles Are Ready.

Philadelphia, Pa.—What is regarded as a most radical version of the Holy Bible has just been placed on sale here at the American Baptist Publication society rooms. It is a Baptist Bible for Baptists only. In that portion of the New Testament where the conversation of the Savior is described, in place of using the Greek "Baptise," the literal translation "immerse" is used so as to conform with Baptist teachings that Christ went down into the water for the baptism.

Paid Minister in Tinfoil.

The meanest man in the world has been found. He is the man who gave the Rev. Thilo Gore, pastor of the German Lutheran church, an envelope filled with tinfoil for marrying him.

The bride and groom rang Dr. Gore's doorbell late one night and asked him to marry them. As they had a license he did so. After the ceremony was performed the man handed the minister an envelope which was supposed to contain the fee. He found it contained nothing but several pieces of tinfoil.—Chicago Tribune.

The Crooked Way.

District Attorney Whitman of New York, according to the Washington Star, was talking about the sad case of a western banker who had stolen a great sum from the depositors.

"The man," said Mr. Whitman, "lived beyond his means—motor cars, a house with eleven baths, son at college, daughter coming out, wife hungry for diamonds. The inevitable result followed."

Mr. Whitman smiled and ended:

"The unfortunate fellow got straitened, so he became crooked."

Scotch Query.

A bluff, consequential gentleman from the south, with more beef on his bones than brain in his head, riding along the Hamilton road, near Blantyre, asked a herdboy on the roadside, in a tone and manner evidently meant to quiz, if he were "half-way to Hamilton?" "Man," replied the boy, "I wad need to ken whar yo has come frae, afore I could answer your question."—Exchange.

NO MEDICINE

But Change of Food Gave Final Relief.

Most diseases start in the alimentary canal—stomach and bowels.

A great deal of our stomach and bowel troubles come from eating too much starchy and greasy food.

The stomach does not digest any of the starchy food we eat—white bread, pastry, potatoes, oats, etc.—these things are digested in the small intestines, and if we eat too much, as most of us do, the organs that should digest this kind of food are overcome by excess of work, so that fermentation, indigestion, and a long train of ails result.

Too much fat also is hard to digest and this is changed into acids, sour stomach, belching gas, and a bloated, heavy feeling.

In these conditions a change from indigestible foods to Grape-Nuts will work wonders in not only relieving the distress but in building up a strong digestion, clear brain and steady nerves. A Wash. woman writes:

"About five years ago I suffered with bad stomach—dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation—caused, I know now, from overeating starchy and greasy food.

"I doctored for two years without any benefit. The doctor told me there was no cure for me. I could not eat anything without suffering severe pain in my back and sides, and I became discouraged.

"A friend recommended Grape-Nuts and I began to use it. In less than two weeks I began to feel better and inside of two months I was a well woman and have been ever since.

"I can eat anything I wish with pleasure. We eat Grape-Nuts and cream for breakfast and are very fond of it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

SLASHED DOZEN TIMES WITH KNIFE

WOUNDS ARE NOT SERIOUS

Victim of Attack Gives His Version of the Affair, Saying He was Asked by Woman to Call on Her in New York.

New York City.—Frederick C. Judson, 21, son of Henry S. Judson, vice president of the Realty Realization Co. of Chicago, and a well known financier, was stabbed a dozen times while in the apartments of Otto Dencker, a Fifth-av. real estate broker on the fourth floor of the Edgemere, 8 West 103rd-st. According to the police the stabbing was done by Dencker, who had discovered young Judson in the company of Mrs. Dencker, a matronly looking woman of 40. Dencker, a powerfully built man of 50, disappeared immediately after the assault and the detectives of the West 100th-st. station had been unable to apprehend him up to a late hour. Mrs. Dencker, after being questioned fruitlessly for six hours at the station house, was permitted to return to her home. Young Judson was taken to the J. Hood Wright hospital, where examination showed that his wounds were mere scratches with the exception of four small cuts in the right leg, shoulder, arm and stomach.

Young Man's Version.

The neighborhood was first apprised of the affair when a fair haired young man, the lines of whose slender well built figure were more fully revealed owing to the fact that he was clad only in an undershirt, dashed wildly out of the Edgemere. With the blood gushing from his wounds the young man ran around the corner to the Greenwich apartments at 446 Central Park west. He dashed into the front entrance, gasped to the elevator man, William Plant, "Get a doctor quick. I've been stabbed. I think I'm dying."

While awaiting the arrival of an ambulance the young man said he had been visiting a woman whom he knew as Mrs. Dana, around the corner. He said he met her on a train coming from Boston. She got off at New Haven, Ct., and told him she had been at a football game there.

"She gave me her card and asked me to call," said Judson. "She told me to ask for Mrs. Dana and I would be taken up to her at once. I've been living at the Racquet club at Philadelphia, but just came to New York. I went to see her and after luncheon I was lying down in the maid's room in Mrs. Dana's apartment when the door was suddenly forced in and a man began calling me names and stabbing at me with a small knife. I fought back as well as I could and got cut on the arm while trying to pull the knife away. He kept stabbing at me and rather than stay there and be murdered I dashed down the stairs and out on the street."

Woman's Side of Story.

Dr. Dickens of J. Hood Wright hospital found that the young man's wounds were not serious and took him to the hospital.

A detective assigned to the case found Mrs. Dencker in her apartment in hysterics. The woman is short and rather stout, a brunette with a rather sharp cast of countenance.

At the police station she stated that young Judson was a casual acquaintance of hers and that he had called upon her at luncheon time. It was about 2 o'clock, she said, when her husband opened the front door of the apartment with a passkey.

Judson became frightened, she said, and dived into the maid's room. "I won't tell you what happened then," she continued, "I won't say that Mr. Dencker did the stabbing. This affair is not one for the police. Is there any charge against me?"

She was told that there was none and that she could go whenever she wished. She said she would remain until the newspapermen had left.

At Dencker's office, 503 Fifth-av., and other places where he was generally to be found, no trace of him was found. It is probable that the case will never reach the courts, as young Judson said at the hospital that he would not make a complaint.

Santa's Aid Going Blind.

Chicago, Ill.—Woe spread among children of the Windy City when it became known that Chicago's official Santa Claus was going blind. John M. Hubbard, assistant postmaster for years, has been given the letters addressed to "Santa Claus" and has organized, unofficially, a bureau where charitably inclined persons might apply the wants indicated in the appealing missives mailed by trusting children. Last year 1,500 such appeals were answered substantially.

Nineteen Killed as Trains Crash.

New Orleans, La.—Nineteen persons are dead and 54 injured, 20 perhaps fatally, as the result of a rear-end collision between a freight and excursion train on the Yazoo & Mississippi Valley railroad, near Montz, La. Thirteen were killed outright, and six died after being brought to a hospital here. Seven whites are among the dead, and a like number among the injured. The rest are negroes.

The wreck was due to a misunderstanding of orders.

Well Known Actress Weds.

New York City.—Blanche Ring, the actress, is married. From Worcester, Mass., where she is now playing in "The Wall Street Girl," she notified friends in this city that she is now the wife of Charles J. Winninger of Wausau, Wis. He has a minor part in her company. The wedding ceremony was performed in Boston recently, but the fact was kept secret until this time. Her friends were greatly surprised although they were fully aware that she had been receiving attentions from Winninger.

VIEWS WIFE'S BONES

OHIOAN CHARGED WITH MURDER SHOWS NO OUTWARD SIGN.

Old German Only Looks, as He Cannot Understand Word the State's Witnesses Are Saying.

Medina, O.—Whatever may have stirred within him when Prosecutor Van App placed before the court here the battered skull that had been pulled loose from the body of his wife, the waist and skirt taken from the body, the horse blanket in which it was wrapped when dug out of the refuse in his stable, the bloody shoes found in a bedroom of the Steuer home, the stained doors and drawers of the kitchen cabinet, Christian Steuer, the 73-year-old civil war veteran, accused of wife murder, showed no outer sign.

Steuer sat throughout the two long sessions of court with his gray head bowed as if in deep thought. Although he maintained his constant stoical attitude, the old man seemed a bit dazed, scarcely changing his position except now and then to cast a sort of mute, appealing glance at Attorney Frank Heath, his lawyer. Once his hand, trembling ever so slightly, went to his lips as if he were nervously biting his nails. Then it dropped back to the chair arm.

For old Chris cannot understand a word that the state's witnesses are saying, he only looks, with his great blue German eyes that have the stare of a baby's, at the state's exhibits. With the inner hearing of a deaf man he seemed to be aware of the adverse remarks, the gasps and mutterings of the morbidly curious, sensation seeking mob that packed the court room.

Children flocked in from school and the old prisoner, casting a furtive glance behind him in a five-minute recess of the court, spied a little girl playing with a baby, while grown people and children discussed his case. He drew out an old bandanna handkerchief tremblingly, and wiped his eyes. Then he turned quickly and resumed his unchanging, stolid attitude.

Coroner H. P. Robinson identified the skull exhibited as the one which pulled loose from the body when it was lifted from the horse blanket in which it was wrapped when dug out of the refuse in the stable Saturday evening, June 22. He testified that the body was in an advanced state of decomposition, a fact which in his opinion was due to the ammonia in the refuse, the heat and moisture. His testimony was borne out by H. G. Rowe, editor of the Medina Gazette, who at the request of the coroner, lifted the head.

Coroner Robinson identified the clothing of the murdered woman. He said he found the skull fractured in the right frontal portion, that it indicated a tremendous blow had been struck, and that the victim of such a blow could not have screamed after receiving it. Dr. Roy B. Strong of Medina, who was present at the post mortem examination the Monday following the finding of the body, corroborated Coroner Robinson's statements regarding the decomposition of the body, the condition of the clothing and the cause of death.

H. G. Rowe, on the stand, told of going to the Steuer farm on the night of June 22, between 7:30 and 8 o'clock and finding the body lying in the stable, partially uncovered, but not taken up. With his knife he ripped the blanket, as the coroner wished to expose the lower limbs.

MENDS HIP WITH SPIKES

Surgeon, in Brooklyn Hospital, Demonstrates New Method of Setting Bones.

New York City.—Nailing a hip together with spikes and hammer was the new method of setting bones demonstrated at the Kings county hospital in Brooklyn for the edification of 50 of the 2,000 leading surgeons of the western hemisphere, here in attendance at the third clinical congress of the surgeons of North America. The operation was performed by Dr. A. C. Bristow. Sterilized steel spikes were driven home with hammers. When the bones knit the spikes will be withdrawn.

FELIX DIAZ ESCAPES PRISON

Rebel Leader Who Was Condemned to Death Is Now in the United States.

San Antonio, Tex.—Gen. Felix Diaz, the rebel leader who was condemned to death, has escaped from the military prison at Vera Cruz, Mexico, and is now in the United States. Andres Garza Galan, one of the leaders of the Mexican revolutionary junta here, confirmed the report from Mexico that Gen. Diaz has escaped and is now in United States territory. He declined to tell the whereabouts of the escaped prisoner for fear he would be arrested by United States secret service men.

Quits Flowery Kingdom Post.

Washington, D. C.—Secretary of State Knox has just made public the first flood of resignations which will come in from the diplomatic corps between now and March 4, next, that of Charles Page Bryan, ambassador to Japan.

"Ill and injuries received in a carriage accident," is given as the reasons for his resignation.

Mr. Bryan is a native of Chicago and was educated at the University of Virginia. He has served in the Colorado and Illinois legislatures.

Ohio Corn Crop 100 Per Cent.

Columbus, O.—Ohio's corn crop this year will be a 100 per cent crop, according to the monthly review just issued by A. P. Sandles, secretary of the state board of agriculture. The condition of wheat is 98 per cent, and of the rye crop 98 per cent. This year's potato crop in this state averaged 118 bushels to the acre, or a total of 11,594,902 bushels. The alfalfa crop averaged three tons to an acre, and 33,711 acres were raised. The sugar beets crop average 11 tons to the acre, or a total of 21,843 tons.

GRAVES WANTS CHANGE

SECRETARY OF STATE HAS PLAN TO LESSEN DELAYS.

Would Close Polls at Four O'clock and Make Election Day a Legal Half-Holiday, With Pay for Toilers.

Columbus.—Secretary of State Graves wants something done to lessen the delay in counting the election returns. He thinks the publication of the official vote and the reporting of the official count should be expedited. He will ask the legislature to make changes which will bring this about and also will propose radical changes in the election system.

He will propose that precinct officers be required to mail the secretary of state a copy of the unofficial vote at the same time they send it to the county board of elections. To give election boards a chance to compile the unofficial vote earlier, he would have the polls close at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and to overcome the objection that early closing would prevent wage earners voting at the end of their days work, he would have election day declared a legal half holiday, with compulsory payment of wages for the whole day.

The most radical proposal he will make to the legislature is to remove the restriction that the secretary of state must follow the recommendation of party committees in naming members of boards of election, the only restriction to remain being that he must not name more than two members of the board from one party.

Teachers Endorse Tax Law.

Despite the constant attempts that have been made to influence the teachers of the state against the Smith one-per cent tax limit, the movement fell flat when more than 2,000 pedagogues in the Central Ohio Teachers' association indorsed the law by almost unanimous vote, and asked only that it be extended and made slightly more elastic to provide greater sums for education. The convention also indorsed the teaching of agriculture in the schools and asked an extension of the work and further legislation defining the professional standard of teachers.

Superintendent John A. Alan, of Mt. Vernon, was elected president of the association at the closing meeting. Other officers were: First Vice President, Principal Orin Harnes, Newark; second vice president, Miss Minnie Preath, London; secretary, Miss Amy Conn, Washington C. H.; executive committee, Superintendent E. J. Brown, Dayton, Superintendent Thas. W. Cookson, Troy, and Principal John Harlor, Columbus.

To Drill Children for Chorus.

Plans are being discussed for the organization of a number of children's choruses in the grammar grades of the public schools for participation in the eisteddfod January 1. There will be a competition for children's choruses with a prize of $100 for the best. It is said a number are being organized in the state, and one is coming from Pittsburg. Mrs. Tillie Lord, supervisor of music in the public schools, said she would begin to organize the choruses soon. Principals and teachers will co-operate, and whether a chorus is formed in any school will depend on the decision of the teaching force of the school. Children may be taken from any grammar grade for membership in the choruses, but all must belong to a single school. Mrs. Lord thinks at least six choruses can be formed. Time usually devoted to general music practice will be spent in drilling the children. They will contain about 50 voices.

Governor Consults Attorney General.

Gov. Harmon had a conference with Attorney General T. S. Hogan and asked him for an official opinion as to whether a chief justice of the supreme court is to be named by the governor under the new constitution. Hogan deplored the fact that the impression had been conveyed that there is difference of opinion between himself and Gov. Harmon as to the law. He denied this in the following statement:

"There is no difference of opinion between Gov. Harmon and myself in reference to the power of the governor to appoint a chief justice in Ohio. The governor expressed no opinion. He merely had the matter presented to him for an opinion. I have no opinion on the matter and merely wish to indicate the drift of my mind on the subject."

Farmer Senator Patterson Dead.

According to Coroner Hensel, heart failure caused the death of Samuel L. Patterson, aged 52, 110 West Third avenue, former member of the state senate found dead in bed by his wife. Mr. Patterson had been in ill health for some time. He formerly was an attorney at Waverly, but moved to this city two months ago. He is survived by his widow and seven children.

Believes in Manual Training.

"Happiness of defective children is the foremost aim in our institution and I believe, as a rule, they are a happier lot than children outside," said Dr. Edson J. Emerick, superintendent of the State Institution for the Feeble-Minded Youth. "Manual training is a great aid in keeping defective children occupied and contented. Less time should be spent in teaching reading and writing, which the children seldom study with interest or profit, and more in training their hands."

Prof. Lowden Opens Course.

Prof. Thomas Scott Lowden, of Ohio State university faculty, opened his series of lectures on practical psychology at the Y. M. C. A. auditorium. Two hundred season tickets have been sold for the course of six lectures. The first subject was "What and How We Inherit." The lectures have been arranged to meet the demand of those who desire to acquaint themselves better with the laws of mental and physical life. Professor Lowden reviewed Darwin's and Weismann's theories of inheritance.

Complete Utility Organization.

The General Gas and Electric Co., which controls the Northwestern Ohio Railway and Power Co., has made the permanent organization of its board of directors by the election of James C. Bishop and J. F. B. Mitchell, of Redmond & Co., New York; W. S. Barstow, Joseph B. Taylor, L. H. Tyng and George C. White, jr., of W. S. Barstow & Co., New York; Francis E. Smith and Herbert Nash, jr., of Moore & Cabot, Boston; G. Tracy Rogers, president of the Binghampton Railway Co., and Henry E. Cooper and A. Ludlow Kramer, vice presidents of the Equitable Trust Co. W. S. Barstow was elected president and Joseph B. Taylor vice president of the company. General Gas and Electric was organized last summer to take over properties in this state and in Vermont. It recently sold $1,300,000 of first lien convertible 5 per cent bonds to the Equitable Trust Co. and Redmond & Co., which are now being sold on a 5.50 basis. Net earnings of the combined properties for the year ended March 31, 1912, show a return of $111,816 after payment of bond interest, or 6 per cent on the $1,300,000 of 6 per cent preferred stock outstanding. The cash cost of the properties which have been acquired is about $2,500,000. Estimates of the earnings for the coming year are $150,000, after fixed charges, or a balance of $72,000 for the $2,600,000 common stock after dividends on the preferred stock have been paid.

Planning New Registration Laws.

Real estate men are preparing to urge the enactment of laws before the coming general assembly to reform the present method of registering land titles. A revised form of the Torrens system of land registration is being proposed for recommendation. Charles F. Laughlin, president of the Ohio Association of Real Estate Dealers, has appointed a commission, composed of Thomas P. Ballard, Cleveland, chairman; Charles Fox, Toledo; Walter H. Martin, Columbus, and Theodore Mayer, Cincinnati, to study the question and prepare recommendations to be offered to the legislature. This commission has already set to work in gathering data and expects to devote a large amount of time to the investigation of machinery and methods elsewhere. A meeting of the entire commission is now being planned, to be held here, for the purpose of a general discussion of the proposition. Walter H. Martin, the local member of the commission, says that it is of the utmost importance to get opinions and data from those states which have had actual experience with a modern registration law before attempting to lay out any plan for legislation. Mr. Martin expresses the opinion that new registration methods have been necessary in this state for several years.

Gas Men Object To Valuation.

Strong protest to the valuation of the property of the Mohican Oil & Gas Co. by Prof. C. E. Sherman, of Ohio State university, field expert for the public service commission, was registered by General Manager M. D. Daly and General Counsel S. H. Tolles, of Cleveland. The company wants the commission's approval of the agreed price of $1,900,000, while Sherman says the property is worth only $1,200,000 at the outside. Testimony of men long in the gas business can be procured to show Sherman wrong, they said.

The chief difference in the value is the five dollars per acre that is given by gas men as the value of all land held under gas leases. Sherman gives it no value, saying the figure was an arbitrary one that had been fixed by some one and accepted by gas men without question.

Fighting Diseases of Children.

Watch the child's sore throat. This is the word which has gone out from the department of public health. Seventeen cases of diphtheria and four deaths from the disease have been reported during the first five days of November. Last month there were 52 cases and eight deaths from diphtheria. Epidemics have been reported at Dayton, Cleveland and Covington, Ky. These are the instructions which have been given out by Dr. Louis Kahn, chief health officer: "Don't let a case of sore throat in a child go without treatment. Call your doctor immediately. Meanwhile keep the child at home. Don't send him to school. It is advisable for the doctor to administer antitoxin as soon as possible. There is little danger from diphtheria if early treatment is given."

For a Game Preserve.

It is said that the state of Ohio will probably establish a game preserve of several thousand acres within a short time. In all probability the preserve will be established within a comparatively short distance of Troy. A tract of land comprising about 1,100 acres has been suggested as the nucleus for the preserve. An option has been offered of $3,000.

To Get a Real Depot.

After patiently waiting for years Pleasant Corners at last is to have a real railroad station. A decree to that effect was issued recently by the public utilities commission, and the B. & O. S. W. Co. must carry out the order at once. A petition asking for the erection of a station at the village was filed formally by Raymond Grant. After considering it, the commission ruled that an agency with proper depot facilities should be established at that place.

Ohio Incorporations Approved.

The secretary of state approved and filed these articles of incorporation:

The Globe Overall Co., Cincinnati; increase $25,000 to $50,000.

MOTIONS OVER-RULED

NATIONAL CASH REGISTER CASE TO BE TRIED IN CINCINNATI.

Judge McPherson Also Refuses to Compel Government to Submit Bill of Particulars to Defense.

Cincinnati, O.—In an opinion handed down in the United States district court upon the motions of John H. Patterson and other indicted officials of the National Cash Register Co. to have the trial of the case held at Dayton and to require the government's attorneys to submit to the defense a bill of particulars specifying the charges the government will attempt to prove at the trial of the case, Judge Hollister overruled both motions. As a result the trial will be held in Cincinnati and the government will not be required to "tip" off its hand.

Following the handing down of the opinion of the two motions mentioned above Attorney Maxwell notified Judge Hollister that he desired to submit a motion for postponement of the case until next February. District Attorney McPherson appeared in behalf of the government and resisted the granting of the motion on the ground that the government had summoned its witnesses and was all prepared for the trial, and that the defense had had ample time to prepare itself. Judge Hollister sustained the contentions of the district attorney and overruled the motion.

RAILWAY WINS ON VOTE.

Ohio Electric Wins its Contest With City of London.

Dayton, O.—In the most hotly contested election ever held in London the Ohio Electric Railway company scored a victory over the town council on the question of the change of the railway's route. The council had previously rejected the company's application by a unanimous vote, and the company then appealed direct to the voters, who approved the change by a vote of 538 to 463.

It was the first time that any public utility corporation had invoked the initiative.

The interest in the result was so intense that the general election was almost entirely lost sight of, and the vote cast on this local issue was the largest in the history of the town.

H. & D. train dispatcher when the railway disaster occurred at Middletown, O., July 4, 1909, and when 24 lives were snuffed out, is dead at the home of his father, L. K. Smith, near Troy. He never recovered from the nervous breakdown suffered immediately after the trains crashed and is said to have died of grief. The Twentieth Century Limited on the Big Four on that fatal day was detouring via the C. H. & D. lines because of a freight wreck near Hughes Station. The train crashed into a freight, which was just taking a switch. Several days after the wreck Smith, his wife and three children went to California, where it was hoped his condition would improve, but the change was ineffective and he returned two weeks ago to his parents' home.

As each member entered the room he was given the official ballot, containing the two tickets, the Bob Whites and the English Harles. The former carried the day and the following officers will be in charge for the coming year: President, Harry C. Downey; vice president, T. A. Graham; secretary, Charles Winkler; treasurer, Carl Caskey; executive committee, George W. Perks, L. E. Bauer and Ray McGregor.

THE COST OF IT.

Have you ever heard of the crime of over-capitalization? It costs the average American family about $100 annually.

This statement can easily be sustained. Various prominent financial students and authorities are responsible for it and their conclusions are wholly sustained by reports of the United States commission and the published figures of the national corporation tax returns, that about $30,000,000,000 of the stocks of railroads and tariff trusts represent only water. ON THIS STOCK DIVIDENDS OF ABOUT $1,500,000,000 ARE BEING PAID YEARLY, AMOUNTING APPROXIMATELY TO $18 A PERSON OR NEARLY $100 PER FAMILY!

This $1,500,000,000 is not picked up out of the streets. Where, then, does it come from? The answer is From the pockets of the consumers. THERE IS NOT A DOLLAR OF "WATER" OR INFLATION IN THE CAPITALIZATION OF CORPORATIONS WHICH DEAL IN COMMODITIES, OR IN RAILROAD OR OTHER PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS, THAT DOES NOT IMPOSE BURDENS UPON THE CONSUMERS AND PRODUCERS OF THIS COUNTRY.

The above figures mean this: That an average family in this country is paying a tax of $100 a year in supporting the over-capitalization of our industries. Can there remain any doubt, then, as to over capitalization being the reason, a sister reason to excessive tariff, for the ever increasing cost of living?

Watered stock is not only one of the prime causes for increased prices of commodities, but it is also an important cause of the present unsatisfactory conditions of labor. To pay these dividends on watered stock, the trust magnates must hold down wages below what they should be, or raise prices artificially high!

Over-capitalization therefore is obviously one of the most important problems confronting the American people today. Politicians, for some reason, refer to it less than they should.

Five hundred glaring illustrations of the crime of over-capitalization could be cited, if space permitted. They would average like this: The Chicago & Alton was capitalized at $30,000,000. When turned over to the purchasing syndicate in 1899 it was capitalized at $94,000,000!

How long are the people going to permit the Perkinses and the Morgans and other financiers to strap upon their backs the burdens of these enormous over-capitalizations, which constitute one of the principal causes of the increase in the cost of living? AND BY FAR THE WORST FEATURE OF THE CRIME OF OVER CAPITALIZATION IS THAT THE BURDEN FALLS ON THOSE LEAST ABLE TO BEAR IT, THE COMMON PEOPLE!

DEBS AND ROOSEVELT

An accurate compilation of the popular vote cannot be obtained at present, and all the tables being printed are approximations more or less close. The remarkable feature of present estimates, however, is that Wilson is being credited with substantially the vote Bryan got in 1908, while the Taft and Roosevelt votes substantially equal the Taft vote of the same year. The socialist vote is conceded to have more than doubled compared with 1908 when Debs polled 420,820.

The drift toward socialism thus appears to be the most significant aspect of the election. It is an outcome that challenges attention. Mr. Roosevelt maintained that socialism could be checked, and he would check it, by incorporating a number of socialist proposals into the program of the new party. One of the main objects of the progressive movement was to head off the more revolutionary movement. The country was solemnly warned by Mr. Roosevelt's Harvard friend and supporter, Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart, that "Unless that movement (socialism) is checked, within 16 years there will be a socialist president of the United States, which means that a socialist national committee will be president. There is only one way to head off the danger, and that is the formation of a party which will take over the reasonable part of the socialist program." But the new party, led by Mr. Roosevelt, after taking over a reasonable part of the socialist program, now witnesses as the result of its efforts the doubling of Mr. Debs' vote. Even the socialists are surprised. They half expected the socialist strength would dwindle in such a contest.

Why was it? Why did Debs poll between 800,000 and 900,000 votes—a total that may reach near the million mark, when all counted? We are now entitled to say what we said during the campaign that the Roosevelt candidacy, with its "strong," "indispensable man" bearings and implications, was repellent to the body of citizens who are inclined to what may best be called social democracy. Rooseveltism, with its marked tendencies toward the concentration of governmental powers and the creation of an overshadowing executive, was the antithesis, in its final analysis, of the kind of democracy of which socialism has dreamed. And here is the proof, in the election returns, that some 500,000 restless citizens in this country, who had never voted for a socialist president before, preferred social democracy to imperial democracy. There probably isn't a social democrat among the millions of them in Europe or Great Britain who would not indorse that choice.

Progressivism evidently must purge itself of its "indispensable man" predilections, and get rid of its adoration of a popular hero before it will succeed in checking socialism in a country like America.—Springfield Republican.

BERGER'S DEFEAT

There are some things usually to be regretted, even in a good thing. Among the regrettable things of the late election, in our estimation is the defeat of Victor Berger, the Socialist Congressman from Milwaukee, for a second term.

We regret it because Berger is an honest man and a gentleman, the former qualification being a desirable thing in any Congressman and the latter being useful to live down the common assumption that one cannot be a Socialist unless his hair is uncombed and his breath smells of garlic. Another cause for regret is that a party that polled close to a million of votes last week and thereby doubled its vote of four years before, is entitled to a representative in Congress not only on the score of numbers but also for the good health of itself. With an intelligent and candid man then, as Mr. Berger is, the fast growing Socialist organization would have a useful connection with public affairs and its information as to what its members ought to have in the way of legislation and how to try to get it, would be a practical and notable thing in the part it is about to take in politics. In other words, a nascent but fast increasing party should have some one on guard where action is taking place, in order that when its larger opportunity comes it can be grasped usefully both to itself and to its opposers.

No one could fulfill this function better than Victor Berger. He is a man of probity and forthrightness, and besides is, as we have said, a gentleman. This means that he is representative of the evolutionary type of Socialist. His weapons are educative and not destructive, and his influence is calculated to sift the dogmas of his party for the real grain that is in them, winnowing the truth from the chaff of error and assimilating it to the uses of the common welfare. Answering this description of course Mr. Berger is no murderer or barnburner, either actual or potential, and such a man in Congress must be a savor of good to his own party and to the public. The people have nothing to fear from the Socialism so long as the appeal of the latter is to the enlightenment that comes from the reason of freemen and not from the torch of the incendiary, and so long as they try to move their fellow men by education and not by dynamite.

The defeat of Mr. Berger was brought about by a combination of both the old parties against him; it was not because of any lack of legislative capacity on his part, or that he did not faithfully represent his city in Congress.—Akron Democrat.

Vermont is now the only state that has an unbroken record of republican victories since the formation of that party. Vermont cast its electoral vote for Fremont in 1856 and it has been regular ever since, in 15 successive elections.

The stand-pat papers congratulate Mr. Wilson fervently and advise or enjoin him to do nothing to interfere with "protected industries." But if "protected industries" are all there is to politics, is it worth while to have this six-months circus every four years?

The president-elect has reason to feel pleased at the handsome things that are being said about him by his opponents. Some hard words were used in the heat of the campaign, but after all they were not of the kind that leave a sting. The whole campaign has shown the respect in which he is personally held.

Grape culture is declining in Georgia because of the prohibition movement, but the vineyards are being replaced with corn fields which supply plenty of the raw material for "moonshine." A new record for Georgia has been made by growing 233¼ bushels of corn on a single acre, which falls but a trifle short of the national record.

The republic of China is now some months old and it has demonstrated its substantial character, yet it still waits on recognition by this country. New republics find very little encouragement from the present imperialistic regime in the United States. Portugal also is in the same boat with China. In the case of the fake Panama "republic" recognition was instantaneous.

If the Socialist vote has reached the million mark, as Socialist leaders claim, the party must be regarded as at last established on a practical basis. It is now full fledged and in a position to make deals and trades. The Socialists, with a voting strength of their proportions, have "broken in." They have proved their right to receive the respectful attention of the older parties and henceforth must be reckoned as a factor in national campaigns.

The Democratic party cannot afford to take counsel of timidity, of sloth, of bosses, of shell-backs, or of the interests that have controlled and entangled the people's government. Two radical if not revolutionary parties are already in the field. Democratic action alone will prevent a union of all the forces of discontent and desperation which will make political rest in this country impossible for many a day. We do not believe that the Democratic party will have another chance right away if it fails now. The cost of living must be reduced. The graft and monopoly must be taken out of the tariff. Congress must meet in March to begin the redemption of Democratic pledges.—N. Y. World.

Only One Way in Which Mr. Hatchett Was Known, and He Didn't at All Appreciate It.

Hannah Holden Hatchett was known as "the pagan poetess." She had published three books. And she had married one man. The names of her books were "Venus and Adonis," "Pipes of Pan" and "Airs From Arcadia." The name of her husband was Michael Moses Hatchett.

Mrs. Hatchett went to parties. Mr. Hatchett went to business. But once Mrs. Hatchett got Mr. Hatchett to stay away from business and go to a party with her. The party was given by Mrs. Benjamin Bonaparte Motley.

Mrs. Motley introduced her guests to Mrs. Hatchett. And to Mr. Hatchett also.

"This is Mrs. Hatchett," said Mrs. Motley.

"I am so glad to meet you!" said Mrs. Faddle. "I have set your 'Ode to Olympus' to sweet, soothing music and have made a lovely little lullaby out of it."

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Hatchett.

"This is Mr. Hatchett," said Mrs. Motley.

"Mrs. Hatchett's husband?" said Mrs. Faddle.

"Yes," said Mr. Hatchett proudly; "you bet!"

"This is Mrs. Hatchett," said Mrs. Motley to a second woman.

"I just adore your 'Nectar and Ambrosia,'" said Mrs. Havoc. "I do my own cooking, and while I boil the coffee and fry the eggs, I always chant the refrain!"

"Good gracious!" said Mrs. Hatchett.

"This is Mr. Hatchett," said Mrs. Motley.

"Mrs. Hatchett's husband?" said Mrs. Havoc.

"Yes," said Mr. Hatchett grimly; "that's me!"

"This is Mrs. Hatchett," said Mrs. Motley to a third woman.

"I am simply crazy about your 'Paean of Praise,'" said Mrs. Rummage. "I have embroidered the first line in yellow chenille on green plush for a mantel drape in my mother-in-law's back parlor."

"Mercy on us!" said Mrs. Hatchett.

"This is Mr. Hatchett," said Mrs. Motley.

"Mrs. Hatchett's husband?" said Mrs. Rummage.

"Yes," said Mr. Hatchett crossly, "nothing more and nothing less—gosh blame it!"—Lippincott's Magazine.

Mary Newhard of Allentown, Pa., Wrote Will in Her Own Homely Way, and It Stands.

E. W. German, register of wills of Lehigh county, admitted to probate the most remarkable will offered here in a century. It was written by Mary Newhard of Laurays, who left several hundred dollars in personal property. It reads:

"I guess it is about time I want my things fixed after I am gone, because I have nobody to depend on except my sisters. I hope they see to things and do it in the way I want it done. It is a great task, but it cannot be fixed otherwise. They always helped me along. I want them to divide my clothes among them, because I have no children, so they are nearest. I have a good lot of things that have to be sold for expenses and then I guess it will reach to bury me decently.

"Such things as my big copper kettle and tubs, washing machine, sewing machine, watch, bedroom suit, bureau, chest, trunk, waiters (two nice ones), casters and other articles are to be sold. There is also a stovepipe in the garret belonging to the parlor stove, a dozen sauce dishes I believe they don't need and a white gravy bowl I paid a quarter for, and two big glass stands, which are to be sold.

"His bedstead, which lays in the garret, I paid a dollar to get it stained and varnished. He can keep that for Mary if he wants to keep her, and my new dough trough I also want sold. I owe a little at Lobach's and I want that paid if there is any money left. I can't do it in my lifetime any more. Yours in hope."—Allentown (Pa.) Register.

Make No Excuses.

We can wrest success from any failure and take from it much of the sting when we frankly admit that it was our fault, and that we have no excuse to offer, while at the same time we express our purpose not to fail in that way again. The world is quick to forgive the man who does not ask to be excused. God can forgive us on no other terms; and God's forgiveness is the only way to assured victory over failure.—The Sunday School Times.

Have an Ideal.

If our minds are resolutely set on an ideal good, and if we follow this with an inflexible patience and persistency, then, though we may often blunder in our choice of ways and means, somehow the grace and sweetness of our inner life will pass into our children's hearts.—J. W. Chadwick.

In Benjamin Franklin's Time.

When Benjamin Franklin was postmaster at Philadelphia, an answer by mail from Boston, when all went well, required not less than three weeks. This was in 1787.—Magazine of American History.

Takes Divine Gift.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

MENTOR.

Nov. 11, 1912.

The weather here in Mentor is something perfectly delightful, and we are meeting each other on the streets and congratulating ourselves upon it, the conversation almost always ending "And I wish it would last until next May."

The sad news has just been telephoned through the village that Mr. Edmund Cadle passed away about seven this morning, having been sick only since Thursday afternoon, with what the doctors called pleura-pneumonia, and having been very violently ill from the first. Several of his children were with him during the short time of his sickness, a trained nurse was in attendance, and a council of physicians was held on Friday. With the death of Mr. Cadle, another of the pleasant Mentor homes is broken up, and a fine man is lost to the community, one who has served the village faithfully, both on the Council and School Board, and as Mayor. As a friend and neighbor, there was none ever better, or one more generous to help any good cause, whether connected with the church, or in caring for the village poor.

Miss Mary Andrews of Burton is the guest of Mrs. Robert Case for a few days just at present, and is renewing her acquaintance here.

The country home of Mr. James R. Garfield "Holly Croft" is again closed for the winter, the family having moved up to the city for the winter months, where their youngest son, Rudolph, (more familiarly known as Bobbie) is at school.

The gentlemen who have had the charge of the Lecture Course for the village have prepared a very good selection of five entertainments, all for the sum of one dollar. The first is to be given Saturday eve at the village hall, and is named "The Raweiss" being given by native New Zealanders, single tickets for which will be thirty cents.

The Methodist Ladies Aid are to hold an all day meeting on Wednesday at the home of Miss Sarah Armstrong, with picnic dinner at noon, and it looks very much as though active preparations were in progress for an unusually fine Bazaar sometime in December.

Miss Fidelia Dewey of Kirtland has been spending a week or so over here with her cousin, Miss Delilah Hammond, at the Center, and both ladies visited their aunt, Mrs. Farnegle in Painesville during the time.

Mrs. Elberta Hayford Fiske, together with her two little folks, Maynard and Arlene are visiting relatives in Munson for a few days now.

Mrs. Charles Sandberg has been quite ill, and under the care of Dr. Lowe but is much better at date, and able to be around again.

The King sisters were in the city doing Christmas shopping this last week, and quite a number of our people are determined to be ahead of the season this year, and so avoid the "rush."

Mrs. Frank Corning was a guest of her youngest daughter, Mrs. John Code, over in Willoughby, for most of this past week.

The Miscellany Club is to meet with Miss Ida Merkle this week Wednesday and the usual good time is anticipated, though one might say an unusually good time—as it is to be a "Social Hour" and what the program is to be has been kept a secret, in order that the surprise and enjoyment may be all the greater. Roll call is to be responded to by quotations from the writing of James Whitcomb Riley.

The Methodist Sunday School was treated to a most delightful and instructive temperance talk yesterday morning after the lesson, said talk being given by Mrs. Cay of Painesville, she having been induced by her friend Mrs. A. D. Carleton (who is Temperance Superintendent) to come out for that purpose, and everybody is hoping she will come again.

Mr. and Mrs. James Francis spent Sunday over in Willoughby, as guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Code, many of your readers will remember Mrs. Code as our Phebe Corning.

Miss Myrtle Shaffer has recently been enrolled as a student at the Spencerian College in Cleveland.

Among the Mentor students attending Painesville High School, there are the following, who are seniors there: Ruth Hayes, Pardoo Sawyer, Elsie Noble, Clara Shults, Dorothy Hormiden and Hazel Sperry (not Jackson as some have thought).

Speaking of schools, the people of the Mentor Village voted 123 for the proposed issue of bonds for the building of a new school house at the Center, only 49 being against it. While we think our people have made a grievous mistake, we would not be "American" to complain very greatly against what the majority have expressed a wish to try, and only the future will show how much of a "High" school can be built and maintained with the sum proposed, and how many of our children will be contented to settle down to any school that can possibly be furnished here, and so give up going to Painesville High.

Several of the gentlemen from here went over to Willoughby on Tuesday evening, in response to the invitation given by the Chamber of Commerce, took supper there and remained to hear the election returns.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Merkle celebrated their wooden wedding (five years) on Wednesday evening, and entertained quite a company of their friends, all of whom enjoyed the evening immensely.

Miss Ara Radcliffe, one of the most successful teachers of Toledo, has been the guest of her aunt, Mrs. W. H. Johnson over the Sabbath, and returned home today.

Mrs. Charles Rexford of Cleveland gave a luncheon on Saturday in honor of her friend and neighbor (when they lived in Mentor), Mrs. J. W. Lowe, to which quite a number of Mentor ladies were invited.

Dr. and Mrs. Lowe are planning to go down to Florida soon now, and are to be accompanied by Mr. Ackley, Mrs. Lowe's father, and are to occupy the cottage owned by the late Mr. Horrison, his son and daughter not feeling yet that they can go back into the house so recently occupied by their father, and so are to winter in California, we understand.

DeForest Brooks of Warren was at Lacwood, the home of his grandfather, Mr. Edmund Cadle, recently, and also a guest of his uncle Mr. T. P. Cadle for a short time.

The members of the Home and Foreign Missionary Societies are to hold their annual "Thank Offering" meeting this week Thursday at the M. E. church, and will serve a ten cent tea at the close of the program.

The suffragist people here are quite encouraged over the fact that now ten states are giving women the ballot. Some one was heard to ask a day or so ago what states they were, and so we have made out the list to be as follows, with the four new states at the last: California, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho, Colorado, Washington, Michigan, Oregon, Kansas, Arizona.

There was considerable more racket here on election night than usual, the school house bell was rung off and on for several hours, and there was the usual hurrahing of course, though no one could catch any name as being the fortunate one (though it remains to be seen whether Mr. Wilson has indeed been fortunate!) We remember having heard the wife of one of our newly elected presidents, say through blinding tears—that it was no desirable thing to be President of the United States! Should Mr. Wilson favor any radical change in the government machinery, he will be killed most likely, and that is all there is about it! The "trusts" have the country by the throat, so what can one man do against such odds?

Escapes An Awful Fate

A thousand tongues could not express the gratitude of Mrs. J. E. Cox of Joliet, Ill., for her wonderful deliverance from an awful fate. "Typhoid pneumonia had left me with a dreadful cough," she writes. "Sometimes I had such awful coughing spells I thought I would die. I could get no help from doctor's treatment or other medicines till I used Dr. King's New Discovery. But I owe my life to this wonderful remedy for I scarcely cough at all now." Quick and safe, its the most reliable of all throat and lung medicines. Every bottle guaranteed. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free at Gehring's Pharmacy.

Protest Reasonable.

Wash Johnson had just made a business visit to Fifth street, where he accumulated a very fine rubberized raincoat which, according to a lurid sign over the door, had been miraculously rescued from the flames by the brave firemen fighting the fire that recently destroyed one of the best known raincoat factories in New York. It didn't even look like rain, but Wash thought he might as well wear it to get acquainted with it.

He grabbed a Tenth street car for home and took the narrow strip of seat by the bulky form of a brother who was as black as waterproof ink.

Now the car stopped at a certain corner just as a negro church was letting out. A file of worshipers streamed into the car and each worshiper brushed against Wash's raincoat as he obeyed the conductor's strident request to "step up in the front of the car, please." Wash stood their brushing in silence for awhile. Then his hot southern blood got the better of him.

"Hesh, heah!" he called querously. "I just paid a dolleh and six bits fo' dis coat, and you all is go'n' a wear it out befo' I can get it home!"—Kansas City Times.

Women Bankrupts.

Women bankrupts were less numerous than in 1910, the figure being 389, against 425. The woman grocer was the least successful among the tradesmen of the other sex, taking the number of failures as the criterion, the woman milliner and dressmaker next, then the woman draper and haberdasher, and fourth the woman lodging house keeper. Married women were slightly in the majority of the failures (161) and single women greatly in the minority (81). There were 157 widows. The woman bankrupt entered into many fields. Among others one notes in the list of the year eleven bakers, four butchers, seven farmers, five fishmongers, four nurses, two photographers, eight restaurant keepers, five schoolmistresses, six tobacconists, two gardeners, nine toy dealers, six stationers and three undertakers.—London Board of Trade Report.

A Night of Terror

Few nights are more terrible than that of a mother looking on her child choking and gasping for breath during an attack of croup, and nothing in the house to relieve it. Many mothers have passed nights of terror in this situation. A little forethought will enable you to avoid all this. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a certain cure for croup and has never been known to fail. Keep it at hand. For sale by all dealers.

NEW IDEA SEIZES ENGLAND

League to Prevent Domestic Breezes From Developing Into Gales Is Latest Fad Takes Up.

A National League for the Promotion of Domestic Happiness is the latest proposal for England. It has for its promoters a few clergymen who have been impressed by the extraordinary number of couples in their parishes who have obtained separation orders from the magistrates because of domestic strife.

The idea of the clerics is that magistrates are too accommodating to applicants chafing under the matrimonial harness and if efforts were made to subdue domestic breezes they would mostly be prevented from developing into gales. So this league is to organize ministers of all denominations and kind Christians of both sexes to act as peacemakers.

They will take their respective parishes under survey and in cases of household strife where the husband is at fault the member of the league most likely to influence him will be selected to intervene and subsequently keep an eye on the culprit. If the wife is the offender then some sympathetic woman will plead with her.

Most enthusiastic workers among the poor, especially in the north, call these separation orders the "working class equivalent to divorce," the latter being too expensive for them to obtain.

The consequence is they have no real freedom, and looseness of morals is the result. In industrial centers, where both husband and wife are wage earners, this is especially the case. Lancashire alone has 25,000 people separated by law, but not free to remarry.

Declare War on Colds

A crusade of education which aims "that common colds may become uncommon within the next generation" has been begun by prominent New York physicians. Here is a list of the "don'ts" which the doctors say will prevent the annual visitation of the cold:

"Don't sit in a draughty car."
"Don't sleep in hot rooms."
"Don't avoid the fresh air."

To which we would add—when you take a cold get rid of it as quickly as possible. To accomplish that you will find Chamberlain's Cough Remedy most excellent. Sold by all dealers.

SYNOPSIS.

Harding Kent calls on Louise Farrish to propose marriage and finds the house in great excitement over the attempted suicide of her sister Katharine. Kent starts an investigation and finds that Hugh Crandall, suitor for Katharine, who had been forbidden the house by General Farrish, had talked with Katharine over the telephone just before she shot herself. A torn piece of yellow paper is found, at sight of which General Farrish is stricken with paralysis. Kent discovers that Crandall has left town hurriedly. Andrew Elser, an aged banker, commits suicide about the same time as Katharine attempted her life. A yellow envelope is found in Elser's room. Post Office Inspector Davis, Kent's friend, takes up the case. Kent is convinced that Crandall is at the bottom of the mystery. Katharine's strange outcry puzzles the detectives. Kent and Davis search Crandall's room and find an address, Lock Box 17, Ardway, N. J. Kent goes to Ardway to investigate and becomes suspicious of a Henry Cook. A woman commits suicide at the Ardway Hotel. A yellow letter also figures in this case. Kent calls Louise on the long distance telephone and finds that she had just been called by Crandall from the same booth. "Cook" disappears. The Ardway postmaster is missing. Inspector Davis arrives at Ardway and takes up the investigation. He discovers that the dead woman is Sarah Sackel of Bridgeport. Louise telephones Kent imploring him to drop the investigation. Kent returns to New York to get an explanation from Louise. He finds the body of a woman in Central Park and more yellow letters. He sees Crandall, whom he recognizes as "Cook," enter the Farrish home. Louise again implores Kent to drop the investigation and refuses to give any explanation.

CHAPTER X—(Continued.)

"I saw Hugh Crandall leaving this house not ten minutes ago," I said.

"Really!"

Her tone was cold, hard, forced though she tried to make it sound natural.

"It was he who broke open your desk," I cried. "He wanted to regain possession of that scrap of paper and thus remove all evidence of his guilt."

"I am afraid," said Louise with the manner of offended dignity, "that you are entirely mistaken. I was not aware that you knew Mr. Crandall by sight."

"If that wasn't Hugh Crandall who came out of your house just now, who was it?" I asked, my anger at this man whom I believed responsible for the chain of evil getting the better of me. "I don't know Crandall, but I know the evil he is responsible for, for the tragedy of your sister, the plight of your father, the suicide of old Andrew Elser, the suicide of that poor woman out in Ardway. Why, not an hour ago I helped drag from the park lake a fifth victim, a poor young girl, driven to death by another of his accursed yellow letters. I found the fragments of it, water-soaked and illegible, in the lake."

"Mr. Kent," interrupted Louise, "you were kind enough to undertake a mission on my behalf and I appreciate it greatly. Certain circumstances have arisen that have entirely altered matters. I called you up last night and asked you to drop all investigations. You have said that you love me. By that love you say you hold for me I now ask you, no—more—I order you to make no further attempts to solve the mystery—please, Harding, please."

Her voice broke, and with one last gesture of appeal she flung herself into a chair and covered her face with her hands.

Perplexed beyond measure with the turn affairs had taken, with my heart aching with sympathy for her, I stood watching her slender form as it shook with sobs, trying to make up my mind what to do. My heart bade me promise her anything, everything, if it would bring her peace of mind, yet my brain told me that it was best for her, best for every one, if I should go ahead as my friend, the inspector, had advised.

"Louise," I began, trying to keep my voice steady, "if you will answer me one question—"

"Don't, Harding, please don't," she sobbed, lifting her tear-stained face to me in entreaty. "You mustn't. You mustn't ask me any questions. If you love me, please do just as I say."

"Louise," I replied almost sternly, "you are not yourself. Can't you rely on me? Can't you trust me? Don't you know that I will do nothing that is not for the best?"

I gathered her into my arms and held her close. I pressed my lips against her fragrant hair where it strayed from under her automobile bonnet. As she lay unresisting in my arms her sobs decreased and she became calmer.

"My darling," I said, "I know that Hugh Crandall has been here. I feel that he has been influencing you against me. Won't you do what your heart bids you and tell me everything about it?"

She drew a long deep breath and gently freed herself from my encircling arms and, facing me, looked at me with firm resolution written all over her lovely face.

"You must do what I tell you. I can answer no questions. I wish I could, but I can't. You mustn't ask me. It isn't my secret."

"The car is waiting, Miss Louise."

As the maid's voice interrupted she gave a start, and reaching her hands out impulsively to me, in more like her own dear voice, said to me: "Harding, I must go. Please trust me, and please, please do what I ask of you. Good-by."

She broke from my encircling hands and ran to the front door.

By the time I reached it after her she was already in the car. I tried to catch the direction she whispered to the chauffeur but could not. Before I could collect my thoughts the great sixty-horse-power machine had vanished around the corner.

Where was she going? It seemed to me that every hour added to the chain of mysteries in which I had become involved. I was convinced that in some way Louise, too, had been ensnared by the master of crime who had plotted all this evil, but how, I could not imagine. Yet more and more, it seemed to me, all clues pointed to Hugh Crandall. What could have been Louise's motive in denying to me that he had been in the house? She must have known it.

I began to wish that I had taken Davis' advice and remained in Ardway. Perhaps by this time I would have had some definite clue. I resolved to go back there at once. The inspector seemed to think that that was the most fruitful field for investigation, and probably he was right. Hailing a taxi, I bade him drive me to the ferry, but to my great annoyance reached it just two minutes too late to make a train. Too dispirited to do anything else, I entered the waiting ferryboat, and, sinking into a seat in the corner, gave myself up to bitter reflection on my failure to solve the problem I had set myself. The more I thought about it the more firmly I became convinced that it was wise to disregard Louise's request. My love for her, my duty to her, demanded that I go on.

So absorbed was I in my reflections that I did not notice that the boat had reached its slip, and I was almost the last to leave it. Just as I stepped off the gangplank a huge machine shot by me, giving me barely time to catch a look at the occupants, but in that fleeting glimpse I recognized them both.

It was Louise with Hugh Crandall.

CHAPTER XI.

More Discoveries.

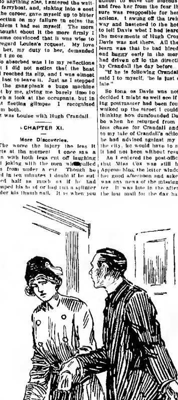
The worse the injury the less it hurts at the moment. I once saw a man with both legs cut off laughing and joking with the men who pulled him from under a car. Though he died in ten minutes I doubt if he suffered half as much as if he had thumped his head or had run a splinter under his thumb nail. It is when you are mortally hurt and live that the pain becomes so terrible.



"I Saw Hugh Crandall Leaving This House Not Ten Minutes Ago."

In the few minutes I had had with Louise I had not realized the depth of the wound in my heart her conduct toward me had made. Even when I saw her dash away from me in an automobile, pained though I was that our interview should have been cut short, I still did not comprehend what a terrible blow it was that had befallen me. It was the sight as I left the ferry of the automobile dashing by, with Louise, the woman I loved, seated beside Hugh Crandall, that gave new poignancy to my pain, that added to the fires of jealousy, that made me understand to the full the dire import of what had happened.

Louise had lied to me.

Crandall had been in the house. She had seen him. She had even left me to join him. She had even deserted her helpless sister and her dying father to go with him. And all the while her lips had protested that no one had been in the house but the doctors and nurses.

As I paced the platform and paced it back again, waiting two weary hours for an Ardway train, as I sat for two unending hours more in the long ride through New Jersey, like a poisoned knife, cutting my heart to shreds and cutting the shreds again, the thought kept coming back to me over and over: "She lied to me."

Quarter a man alive, pour molten metal into his eyeballs, feed him salt fish and cut off water, bury him alive in quicklime, devise what torture you will and double it, the pain and agony can not equal that which comes to a man who, believing in and trusting and loving a woman with his whole heart, is forced to admit to himself that she has deceived him—that she has lied to him. In those awful hours I came to know the seven hells. I went through all of them.

Only one ray of comfort came to me. As I had asked myself "Why did she lie?" I found myself believing that she had done so, not of her own free will, but impelled by some motive so powerful that she could not resist it. That it was the influence of Crandall I could no doubt. He had so preyed on her fears for her father and sister, perhaps on her fear for me, that he had induced her to try to persuade me to give up my investigation and had made her promise to accompany him on some doubtful secret mission.

"It is not my secret."

I recalled the piteous cry my entreaties had wrung from her lips, and found the logical explanation of it in her having been terrorized by that villain, Crandall. If I could have found him at the moment I could have killed him with my naked hands.

Yet even though I was convinced that Louise had lied to me, I began to feel that whatever she had done, whatever she was now doing, was in the belief that she was acting for the best for her dear ones, for me.

My duty to her, my duty to myself, I reasoned, demanded that I do my utmost to solve the hideous mystery and free her from the fear that I was sure was responsible for her strange actions. I swung off the train at Ardway and hastened to the hotel, eager to tell Davis what I had learned about the movements of Hugh Crandall, but Davis was not there. All that I could learn was that he had hired a horse and buggy early in the morning and had driven off in the direction taken by Crandall the day before.

"If he is following Crandall's trail," said I to myself, "he is just a day too late."

So long as Davis was not about I decided I might as well see if the missing postmaster had been found. As I walked up the street I could not help thinking how dumfounded Davis would be when he returned from his fruitless chase for Crandall and listened to my tale of Crandall's actions. While he had advised against my return to the city, he would have to admit that it had not been without result.

As I entered the post-office I found that Miss Cox was still in charge. Approaching the letter window, I bade her good afternoon and asked if there was any news of the missing postmaster. It was late in the afternoon and the last mail for the day having been distributed she sat crocheting. She motioned to me to come around to the rear door.

"How about it?" I asked as I entered the office, "has anything been heard of Rouser?"

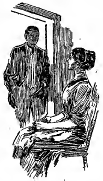
She shook her head.

"That's about the eighty-ninth time I've answered that question to-day. Seems like the whole town was in here wanting to know."

"Has the post-office inspector been here?"

"He was in here this morning and made just the routine examination. He didn't ask no questions, though I understand he has been sleuthing around up to Widow Smith's, where Charlie Rouser boards. If he's looking for anything wrong with Charlie's accounts it's my private opinion that he ain't going to find it. I've been all over the books twice today and there ain't anything out of the way."

"Have you any idea where all that money came from that we found behind the cash drawer?"



"Has Anything Been Heard of Rouser?"

"No, and I don't see that it's any of my affair. His books is right, and his stamps and his stamped envelopes is all accounted for. Maybe he made it in Wall street or maybe somebody left it there with him for safekeeping."

As I recalled Davis' parting instructions to me when I had first come out to Ardway, I was more and more surprised that he had not investigated further at the post-office. He had seemed to think that the clue to the whole mystery would be found there, and he had particularly charged me to find out to whom Lock Box No. 17 had been rented. I decided to ask Miss Cox if she knew anything about it.

"Seventeen has never been rented as long as I have had anything to do with the office. It is away off there in the corner where it is hard to see into. There's always been more boxes than there was any call for. Not one of them in the lower row ever has been rented, even in summer, when there's a lot of city folks out here."

"Do you ever remember of seeing any mail addressed to that box?"

She worked industriously at her crocheting for a minute or two before replying and then, putting it aside, said thoughtfully:

"It's funny that you should have asked me that."

"Why?"

"I don't know that I've any business telling you," said Miss Cox, as she debated with herself whether or not she was talking too much, "but I am as anxious as anybody to find out what's become of Charlie Rouser, and from what I've seen of you I guess you're a sight more likely to find him than Jim Dobbs, the constable. If I wasn't sure in my own mind that Charlie hadn't done nothing out of the way, I don't know as I'd even be telling you about it. But since you've asked me, I guess I will."

She hesitated, studying my face as if trying to read there whether or not I meant harm to the missing postmaster. I tried not to exhibit undue interest, though inwardly I felt quite jubilant. I was certain that I was on the track of important revelations.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Famous Sword Blades of Japan.

Swords equal to the famous blades of Toledo and Damascus are made in Japan by a special series of processes, but a feature of the industry is the religious ceremony that accompanies the work. On the walls of the huts in which the operations are carried on are representations of the god of the sword makers and the chief goddess of the Shintos. There are also bits of paper and wisps of straw, charms to keep away evil spirits. No female is allowed to enter the place, as the presence of women is supposed to be conducive to the appearance of demons who would certainly bring disaster to the sword's mission. Prayer is offered before the work begins, and various religious rites must be performed before any one of the swords can be declared to have been well and truly made.

To Study Resuscitation Effects.

The American Medical association is to make a study of methods of resuscitation from electric shocks. Many eminent physicians and electrical engineers are to co-operate in the investigation, which it is hoped will have important practical results.

Tact Better Than Command

Good Idea to Let "Less Criticism and More Comradeship" Be Your Guiding Motto.

"Less criticism and more comradeship," would be a helpful maxim for all homes.

It is easy enough to be pleasant to the casual acquaintance, but the great difficulty lies in being decent to those who are devoted to us—to those who are ever willing to forgive our shortcomings. There is no duty above treating your friends courteously and trying to illuminate the general monotony of the lives of those you love.

In home life tact will succeed often where command will fail. Suggestions will go farther than argument. Direction is so much better than dictation. Criticism of loved ones is a vice that takes possession of one like a stimulant, or a drug, once it is encouraged. It may begin in our so-called high moral standard and hatred of sin. But once it becomes a habit, it is indulged in for the satisfaction it gives.

An Eden can be ruined by constant fault-finding, selfishness, and withholding the words of praise. A paradise can be created by small kindnesses and by thinking sweet and helpful thoughts of those about you.

The next time you feel like criticizing a loved one, force yourself to say something complimentary to him instead.

Try it and see if you won't be happier.

Exactly.

"Do you believe that poverty is comparative?"

"It must be when a girl complains that she cannot afford to have more than one diamond necklace for all costumes."

FRESH AIR THE FIRST

OF ALL MEANS OF IMPROVING COMPLEXION, THE BEST.

No Cream, Lotion or Bleach Can Be Compared to It—Properly Feed the Lungs at Night as Well as Day.

How large a part does fresh air play in the numerous plans you are making for improving your looks? Is it not true that you have already selected the cream and lotion you will use, and the kind of bleach you think you will prefer? I believe that you have even decided which new face powder you will try in place of the old which has proved unsatisfactory. But how about your plans for the greatest beautifier of all, fresh air?

Not fresh air once in a while, when you happen to go out doors—not even the daily airing out of your living rooms or the office—not the tiny crack at the top of the window which lets in an occasional whiff of fresh air when the wind happens to blow on the side of the house where your sleeping room is situated. Not one or all of these precautions will answer the purpose.

If you would be really beautiful; if you would have a clear complexion with that indefinable bloom which is so fascinating, if you would have bright eyes and peachblow tints, you must have fresh air, not occasionally, but all the time. Your lungs must be supplied with oxygen in order that the blood which circulates through your veins will be the rich, red blood that brings health and vitality and a good digestion.

If fresh air is good for you at any time, there is no time when it is not good for you. If your lungs need fresh air in the daytime, they certainly need it at night. Fresh air means clean air; air which has not become vitiated with waste matter. You would hesitate to take into your stomach anything you knew was not cleanly, but do not stop to realize that frequently the air you are taking into your lungs is positively unclean, unwholesome and unhealthful.

The first rudiments of hygiene will teach us the necessity for fresh air if we would be beautiful. We can also make an almost immediate demonstration for ourselves, because a sallow skin will show marked improvement in less than a week when the constant inhalation of perfectly fresh air has replaced the careless habit of breathing vitiated air from unventilated rooms.

If you are troubled with pimples and eruptions of the skin, fresh air may not eliminate them entirely, but it will be of great assistance. If your eyes are not bright, and your head feels dull and stupid, try the open air remedy for twenty-four hours of the day. I can almost guarantee that the dullness will vanish and not return till you are compelled to spend another day in an atmosphere that has been breathed and rebreathed, till it is not fit for a human being to dwell in.

So great is my faith in the many benefits to be derived from the constant dwelling in an atmosphere that is clean and wholesome and pure, that I believe I would suggest fresh air as the first requisite for beauty, and then follow with the list of creams and lotions and bleaches and depilatories and all the other desired and desirable beautifiers.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES.

New Reader: Your letter was refreshing in its directness and lack of apology. There is no reason whatever in continuing to wear a crown of speckled and streaked tresses when they can be restored without any harm to either hair or health. Like so many of my readers, you admire the white locks, when they are really snowy, but do not enjoy the betwixt and between period. You can use the darkener without any fear of any ill results whatever, and I can give the information you ask for when you send me the self-addressed envelope with a stamp in the corner.

Marjory X.: "Making up" the face is permissible under some circumstances, but the great trouble with the average person who uses any of the means of making up the face is that they do not know just when and where to stop. Sometimes they stop so far in front of the ears that a decided line is left between the red and white of the cheeks and the yellow or brown of the natural skin at the sides of the face and on the neck. Or, in putting a touch of dark under the lower lashes to enlarge the eyes, they put on so wide and dark a line that the eyes are given an ugly, staring look, which spoils the prettiest face. A triple mirror is an absolute essential for the toilet table of the woman who indulges in powder and rouge and darkening pencils, because unless she has one she never knows how the sides of her face appear.

Fashions Less Barbaric.

Grace Margaret Gould, fashion editor of the Woman's Home Companion, writes as follows in "An Informal Fashion Talk:"

"Perhaps some of you women remember how I am always talking about the middle course in fashion. And don't you see that it is really the safest? For if you go along in a conservative, sensible way, you are never in danger of making a caricature of yourself, no matter how many times fashion changes her mind. But it is natural for me to look on the bright and better side of fashion. In fact, American dress, I believe, is each year becoming less barbaric and more civilized, less stupid and more spiritual; indeed, I see increasing signs that art and fashion and common sense may yet form a trust in dress. It will be a good trust, too, which, when once in operation, neither man nor woman will ever want dissolved. For art is all right to suggest, fashion is all right to make, but common sense should have the say as to when and how, and by whom."

Social Forms and Entertainments

Thanksgiving Wedding Day.

Kindly answer the following questions regarding the noonday wedding to take place on Thanksgiving day at the church. In what order should the maid of honor, ring bearer and the best man enter the church? What should be served at a reception which will follow immediately after the ceremony? Is it necessary to send an invitation to each member of a family, or can I say "Mr. and Mrs. Blank and family?" Thanking you most sincerely.—Perplexed.

The best man with the groom enters the church from the vestry and with the minister awaits the coming of the bride, who is first preceded by the ring bearer, then the honored maid, and last the bride on the arm of her father, or whoever gives her away. If there is no one to do this she may enter alone.

At that season of the year you could serve chicken or sweetbreads, creamed in heart-shaped pastry shells, sandwiches of brown and white bread, olives, salted nuts, a salad with wafers, coffee, ice cream and of course the traditional wedding cake. Slippers of white or pink or tiny white satin bags filled with candied puffed rice are pretty for souvenirs instead of wedding cake boxes.

Good form requires a separate invitation for each unmarried member of a household; the "and family" is strictly out of date. Economize in some other way, but not on your invitations.

Duties of a Bridesmaid.

Please state the duties of a bridesmaid. In just what way should she assist the bride? I expect to wear deep cream or buff. Please advise whether you think crepe meteor would be more appropriate than marquisette.—J. L.

If there is only one maid she immediately precedes the bride to the altar, stands by her side, holds her bouquet and throws back her veil if she wears one. It is customary for her to stand by her side when receiving, but this is not always done.

I fancy the crepe meteor is softer and prettier for your gown than marquisette.

Visiting Cards for Young Girl.

I am a young girl—sixteen. How soon will it be proper for me to have my own cards and should "Miss" precede the name and should my name be written out in full?—Schoolgirl.

You may have your own cards right now, although until you make your debut your name is supposed to be on your mother's card to use in making formal calls and for invitation purposes, but there are so many occasions where a girl needs her own card. Have "Miss" and your name, be it short or long, engraved in full, no abbreviation or prefixing initials before a name.

A High Noon Wedding.

Will you kindly state at just what time "high noon" is? Also suggest a menu for three courses for a wedding breakfast at that hour, to be served in buffet style, as a flat prevents any other method of serving.—Mrs. J. H. B.

High noon is exactly 12 o'clock, and is the favorite hour for a wedding with our English cousins, and even more so now since Alice Roosevelt selected that time. For the first course serve iced cantaloupe filled with slired pineapple and Maraschino cherries, then chicken salad with plain sandwiches.

From a "Perplexed Man."

Sometimes a young woman is very friendly in speaking when she enters the dining-room; again she does not recognize me. Since I consider that it is her place to speak first, am I not justified in not noticing her hereafter?—A Perplexed Man.

I would be really sure that the person in question was intentional in not noticing me, and as it is conceded that a woman has the privilege of being the first to show recognition, if she continued to ignore my presence I should certainly give no evidence that I knew she was on earth.

The Proper Thing to Do.

Will you kindly tell me if it is correct form for young men to call and leave their cards after they have been invited to a party? Also the correct pronunciation of "Misses" in the Misses Brown.—Allen.

It is indeed the correct form for young men to make party calls after having partaken of a person's hospitality, but few of them do it—more's the pity. "Misses" is usually preceded by the word "the," and sounds exactly as if spelled "Mrs."

MADAME MERRI.

Fads.

COACH STAGG OF MAROONS IS RESOURCEFUL

It would take a brainier man than any critic present at the recent Maroon-Purdue game to tell whether Chicago had a good team or a poor one, for Chicago played marbles rather than football. Only one thing was shown, that Chicago must better its tackling. Aside from that there was not a strong or weak point brought out.

Chicago showed herself the most contradictory team in the country in this game. At times the Maroons did some brilliant work in particular lines, but on the next occasion they were given came through with about as gross an attempt as possible. More than one critic was of the firm conviction the Maroons were playing possum for some of their "bonehead" work was so coarse that it is difficult to see how men who ever had seen a football could have been guilty unless it were intentional.

Coach Stagg was said to have given the Maroons at least a half dozen intricate forward pass formations for the Purdue contest, but if he did that, the weakness of the Lafayette eleven enabled Paine to treasure these plays and have them fresh to use in future contests. However, the resourcefulness of Coach Stagg must not be underestimated.

WRESTLING IS ROUGH SPORT

Inhabitants of Iceland Fond of All Sorts of Outdoor Games—Horse Racing Is Popular.

E. M. Newman, the traveler and lecturer, tells an interesting story about a wrestling bout that he witnessed in Iceland last summer.

"The inhabitants, or rather the sporting fraternity in Iceland, are very much interested in all sorts of outdoor sports," said Mr. Newman.

"They have developed a sort of catch-as-catch-can style of wrestling that is as unique as it is rough and is entirely different from the game as it is known in this country.

"Each contestant has a strap firmly fixed about his loins. The wrestlers get their grips on this strap. Tripping and body holds are absolutely barred, the object being to raise the opposing contestant into the air by means of the strap and then to drop him on his back. It is a very rough sport, broken bones being the rule rather than the exception. Wrestling bouts are very popular in Iceland.

"Horse racing is also a popular sport with this northern people. In Reykjavik, the capital of Iceland, there is a splendid race course where meets are held at regular intervals. The Iceland ponies are very similar in appearance to Shetland ponies but they are sturdier and fleeter of foot. Great excitement prevails in the city while the races are on, the people coming from all parts of the island.

"Betting is wide open, fast and furious. It is no unusual thing for a man, who has spent months on a whaling expedition, to wager his entire earnings and all his possessions on his favorite pony."

ODD DECISION IN BASEBALL

Base Runner Ten Feet From Plate, but Umpire Declares He Scored Run With Cork Leg.

When Albert Billings kicked his cork leg across the home plate in the ninth inning of a game recently played at Canfield, Colo., the score being already a 5 to 5 tie, the umpire called the runner safe.

Then the last baseball game of the season broke up in a row. However, Umpire Jerry Carter, consulting the rule book, declared that there was no precedent and held to his decision.

When the teams lined up for play it was found that one team was shy a man. Billings of the cork leg volunteered and the first thing he did was to knock a two-bagger. He stole third and started home when one of his teammates hit to shortstop.

The shortstop tossed the ball to the catcher, ten feet ahead of the runner, the cork leg flew off and crossed the plate, while the owner of the leg dropped to the ground.

The catcher stepped out and tagged the prone figure, but the umpire was watching closely and ruled that the foot at the end of the cork touched the plate. The opposing team claimed that Billings was out because the catcher tagged him before he crossed the plate.

See Weakness in Films.

The Cornell football squad, the despair of the coaches throughout the early season, will have an opportunity to study some of the weaknesses as they are seen by the spectator. A series of moving pictures of the team in action was taken and the men will witness their work reproduced on the screen of a local moving picture theater, showing them in both offensive and defensive play. Analysis of the pictures is expected to bring home in a striking way some of the weak points of the players.

Players as Writers.

It is said there is a movement on foot among the powers in the major leagues to put an end to baseball players "writing" their impressions of the big series, especially those who participate in the games.

Carrigan Gets Automobile.

The home folks at Lewiston, Me., gave Bill Carrigan, the Red Sox catcher, an automobile. It begins to look as though anybody with a baseball suit can get an automobile these days.

WOMEN IN TENNIS CONTESTS

California Players Make Overtures to Secure Leading English Experts for Winter Games.

California lawn tennis players are making overtures to the English association with a view to bringing over to this country a team of the leading women players to compete along the Pacific coast during the coming winter season. Ever since the successful campaign which May Sutton made of the English courts a few years ago, finally winning the all-English championship, there has been no effort to establish an international series for women of the United States and Great Britain.

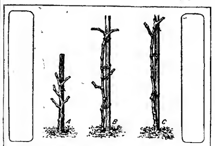
IMPORTANT FACTS REGARDING PRUNING AND OTHER NECESSARY WORK IN VINEYARD

First Trimming After Planting May Be Done Any Time During Winter When Vines Are Dormant and Not Frozen—Varieties Require Different Methods.

(By GEORGE C. HUSSMANN, Pomologist, United States Department of Agriculture.)

In vineyard grafting, many operators, a month or so before grafting, cut off the stem of the vine an inch or two above where it is to be grafted so that the stock may bleed profusely. Water sprouts that otherwise would appear are thus to a great extent eliminated.

In cleft grafting, the vines are cut off at a smooth place near and preferably a little above the surface of the ground, unless it is desired to have the grafts establish themselves on their own roots, as it makes the removal of water sprouts and roots starting from the scion much easier and lessens the danger of injuring the scion before it is thoroughly knitted to the stock.



Vines headed back for different systems of training: A, The spur and fan system; B, the four-arm renewal system; C, the two-arm Kniffin, Munson, umbrella, and overhead systems.

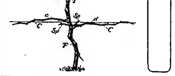
The first pruning after planting may be done any time during the winter when the vines are dormant and not frozen. The extent of pruning will depend on the growth made. If the growth has been small, all the canes except the strongest should be removed, and this one cut back to two eyes. If a strong growth has been made and there is one straight well-ripened cane, all other growth should be removed and this cane cut back to the height at which it is intended to head the vine. The cane should be tied securely and, as it is to become and remain the trunk or main body of the vine, should be kept as nearly erect and straight as possible.

Where the vine was cut back to two buds only one should be allowed to grow. All other young shoots should be removed, preferably when quite young and not more than three or four inches long. This concentrates all the force and growth of the plant into the cane, which is to become the trunk of the vine. The shoot left to grow must be kept carefully tied to the stake to cause it to grow erect and also to protect it from being broken by the wind or other agency. When a shoot has grown to a foot above where it is intended to head it should be topped slightly above where the head is to be, causing laterals to grow where they are desired. Only such shoots should be allowed to grow as are needed for shaping the vine for the following season. All suckers should be promptly removed.

By the third year all vines should have erect, straight stems with two or more canes growing from the principal part, out of which the head or crown is to be formed and from which the growth of the vine is to be renewed from year to year.

The vine, when permitted to do so, bears its fruit on shoots from the last year's wood growth; therefore, the cardinal point underlying all correct pruning, be the method of training what it may, is first to grow and shape or adjust the main body or permanent part of the vine to the method of training desired. After this has been done the growth on this, the fruit-bearing part of the plant, should be so pruned that it will be renewed from year to year, never allowing the plant to overbear, but making it bear to its full capacity. If this is done the body of the plant gradually becomes stronger and its fruiting capacity increases correspondingly, no wasteful plant growth is allowed at the expense of fruitage and the vines are easily kept clear of insects and fungous diseases. The manner of renewing the growth on the body of the vine so as to leave the body permanent is illustrated.

Not only do different countries have different methods of pruning and training, but methods often vary in the several districts of the same country. The inherent peculiarities of the varieties themselves often require special methods to obtain the best results. No attempt is made to describe methods other than those that appear most applicable and have proved most satisfactory for the grape species grown in various parts of the United States.



A vine pruned according to the four-cane Kniffin system: C, Canes, called shoots when green and canes when mature; Sp, spurs, canes cut back to one to four eyes; T, trunk, the stem or main body of the vine; a, b, c, d, arms.

TRYING A SMALL FLOCK OF SHEEP

For All-Around and General Purpose Animal None Better Than Shropshire.

Sheep raising on a small scale is almost universally profitable on almost every farm, but when more than a small flock is kept quite a different proposition is involved, says the Progressive Farmer. With a small flock no special pastures are required; they can be housed in buildings and used for the other stock without crowding and require little feed and practically no special attention. When a larger flock is kept two or more pastures should be maintained, ample houses for keeping dry without crowding provided, and an abundance of suitable feed supplied.

For the south we are inclined to favor the Shropshire, Southdown and the Dorset. For an all round and general purpose sheep there is probably nothing better than the Shropshire. The Dorsets produce early lambs and being good milkers, the lambs grow rapidly. As a matter of fact, however, any breed of sheep will prove satisfactory if given the care and feed which they need. It is probably a fact, however, that except on the highest and dryest lands sheep are more likely to suffer from parasites and not do so well in the south as in the dryer and colder climates of the north. We are not inclined to give livestock as much care as they receive in the north and really to raise sheep successfully we believe they require more care, especially if kept in large flocks.

We advise the beginner in this line of stock raising to procure the best native ewes obtainable in his locality and then buy a pure-bred ram and with this small flock learn the business thoroughly before attempting to raise sheep in large numbers.

Method of Hoeing.

In hoeing a long, slow movement should be made. If the soil is in good condition, simply scuffing half an inch of the top soil is enough to kill weeds and one can go over a lot of ground in one day if the hoe is sharp and bright and the strokes long and smooth.

Storing Sweet Potatoes.

After being handled the sweet potatoes should be stored in a warm dry place. A temperature of 60 to 70 degrees is about right for the proper keeping of sweet potatoes.

Some persons have stored them in the sand or dust from the country road to help preserve an even temperature.

If the potatoes are stored in sand or dust, care must be taken that the sand is perfectly dry.

Handled carefully, sweet potatoes can be kept for some months and will be found of good quality late in the winter.

Cold Milk Separation.

Some farmers leave pails of milk sitting around on the cold ground, or hang them up in some place while they do their chores, and then blame the cream separator and its maker because the machine cannot separate so much cream from chilled milk as from milk separated so near animal heat as possible.

WESTERN CANADA'S PROSPERITY

NOT A BOOM, BUT DUE TO NATURAL DEVELOPMENT.

One of the largest banks in Holland has been doing a big business in Western Canada, and Mr. W. Westerman, the President, on a recent visit into the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, expressed himself as being much impressed with present conditions and prospects, and was convinced that the great prosperity of the Dominion was not a boom, but merely the outcome of natural developments.

Not only has money been invested largely in Western Canada by the Holland Banks, but by those of Germany, France, as well as Great Britain. Not only are these countries contributing money, but they are also contributing people, hard headed, industrious farmers, who are helping to produce the two hundred million bushels of wheat and the three hundred million bushels of the other small grains that the Provinces of the West have harvested this season.

During the past fiscal year there came into Canada from the United States 133,710; from Austria Hungary 21,651; from Belgium 1,601; Holland 1,077; France 2,094; Germany 4,664, Sweden 2,394; Norway 1,692; and from all countries the immigration to Canada in that year was 354,237. From the United States and foreign countries the figures will be increased during the present year.

Most of these people have gone to the farms, and it is no far look to the time when the prophecy will be fulfilled of half a billion bushel crop of wheat in Western Canada. Advertisement.

THE RIGHT SOAP FOR BABY'S SKIN

In the care of baby's skin and hair, Cuticura Soap is the mother's favorite. Not only is it unrivaled in purity and refreshing fragrance, but its gentle emollient properties are usually sufficient to allay minor irritations, remove redness, roughness and chafing, soothe sensitive conditions, and promote skin and hair health generally. Assisted by Cuticura Ointment, it is most valuable in the treatment of eczemas, rashes and other itching, burning infantile eruptions. Cuticura Soap wears to a wafer, often outlasting several cakes of ordinary soap and making its use most economical.

Enterprising.

In a section of Washington, says Harper's Magazine, where there are a number of restaurants, one enterprising concern has displayed in great illuminated letters, "Open All Night." Next to it was a restaurant bearing with equal prominence the legend: "We Never Close."

"Me Wakee, Too."

Was Fun to Choose.

A number of drivers of racing cars who were in Louisville to participate in the motor races were present at a luncheon in honor of one of the leading contestants, who told several automobile stories.

"But my best story," said the racer, "is about a taxicab chauffeur. This man was discharged for reckless driving and so became a motorman on a trolley car.

"As he was grumbling over his fallen fortunes a friend said:

"'Oh, what's the matter with you? Can't you run over people just as much as ever?'

"'Yes,' the ex-chauffeur replied, 'but formerly I could pick and choose.'"

The Power of the Press.

A newspaper can drop the same thought into a thousand minds at the same moment. A newspaper is an adviser who does not require to be sought, but comes to you briefly every day of common weal, without distracting your private affairs. Newspapers, therefore, become more necessary in proportion as men become more equal individuals, and more to be feared. To suppose that they only serve to protect freedom would be to diminish their importance; they maintain civilization.—De Tocqueville.

What Dress Is to Women.

Fashion is woman's literature. Dress is the expression of her personal style. By dress she conveys the outward expression of her taste, of her skill, and even of her aesthetic individuality. It is thus that she contrives to charm the eyes of the arts, the art containing all the others. It is not the expression of her characteristic style, as we have said, but it is her palette, her poem, her theatrical setting, her song of triumph.

The Retreat From Moscow.

Napoleon's army for the invasion of Russia numbered 550,000. Only twenty thousand returned. During the retreat thousands of horses lay groaning on the route, while thousands of naked wretches were wandering like specters, who seemed to have no sight or sense, and who only kept reeling on till frost, famine or the Cossack lance put an end to their power of motion.

KNOCKERS

Are Again at Work to Cripple the Electric Plant.

An ordinance authorizing the city to issue bonds for the sum of $5,000 for the further equipment and extension of lines of the electric light plant was brought before the meeting but lost on the roll call. THE CONDITION OF THE LIGHT PLANT IS RATHER SHAKY AND IT WAS HOPED THAT THIS BOND ISSUE MIGHT TIDE THE CITY ELEPHANT OVER A NARROW PLACE. Some new method of procedure will have to be found to care for the finances of the plant.—Telegraph-Republican.

In an interview with Mayor Wynne Smith, Wednesday, the attention of the Mayor was called to the above publication in the Daily Telegraph-Republican. The Mayor pronounced the statement of the Telegraph-Republican as a falsehood and a misrepresentation of the condition of the electric light plant. He says that the plant is in first class condition and if the city paid its share toward street lighting that the plant would be on a basis of financial self support, even returning a handsome profit on the investment.

It appears that while the city has provided that it shall pay into the electric lighting fund, a certain amount each year for street lighting, that up to this time no actual money has been paid into the fund and it was to provide for this indebtedness of the city that a bond issue was proposed, until a tax levy could be provided.

We are informed that at the council meeting Monday night Councilman McLeod opposed the bond issue with the purpose in view of embarrassing the municipal plant, and eventually throwing his influence to the purchase of electricity from a private corporation. Mr. McLeod's opposition was enough to suspend the passage of the ordinance but it is believed that when all members are present that his vote will be alone in opposition to the ordinance.

The vote of Councilman McLeod and the report of the vote in the Daily Telegraph-Republican shows that opposition to the city plant will be continued, and that every means will be used to retard the growth of the city electric business, and that its enemies will not hesitate to misrepresent the condition of the plant in order to turn over to the C. P. & E. Ry. Co. the lighting contract of the city of Painesville.

Such reports as the one published above from the leading newspaper of the city do incalculable damage to the city and is a knock at an investment of the city in which many thousands of dollars are involved. It unsettles the business and keeps users of electricity on the anxious seat. It is a matter of regret to all fair minded citizens, that a few knockers should keep up this continuous agitation after it was settled upon by a vote of the people that municipal ownership was the choice of the people in the conduct of this business. The time has gone by when there should be opposition to the Painesville Electric Business, and every citizen should lend his influence and voice at all times to its support and help it to grow and expand until it becomes an object of civic pride.

OHIO DEMOCRATS

Plan to Carry into Effect the Platform Pledges

"I think the task laid down for the democracy of Ohio is plain," said Governor-elect Cox, in Hamilton, his former home, recently. "The programme was set forth in the platform adopted by the Democratic party at Toledo, and that platform is written so definitely that there is no reason for dispute as to its meaning. I propose to have that platform written into law. If there is any division on this point I am not aware of it, but if a division occurs it will be brought about by men who are not disposed to keep the faith. The Democratic platform is a contract with the people, and I am going to keep it; no matter what the cost to party harmony."

Never in the history of Ohio has a Governor-elect been so frank or outspoken in outlining the policies of a forthcoming administration. There has been no change in Mr. Cox since the election. He stands for the same things now that he did when he was a candidate.

The statement quoted above, relates to only part of the New Governor legislative program. He has explicitly set forth his entire program in speeches both before and after election, but in this article will be set forth legislation necessary to redeem planks in the Democratic platform. It is the new Governor's idea that this subject should first be taken up by the legislature. Other legislation in the new Governor's program will be set forth by this paper later.

Here is a list of the planks in the party's platform:

First—A short ballot in the selection of administrative officers.

Second—Separate ballots for state and national officers.

Third—Home rule for cities and villages. A constitutional amendment provides for home rule, but operative statutes are necessary.

Fourth—The immediate valuation of all public utilities to the end that rates for service to the public shall be based on actual values and not upon capitalization.

Fifth—Home rule in taxation. Adopted at special election, but state levy must be repealed.

Seventh—A further reduction in the hours of labor for women and further restriction on the right of employment of children in workshops and factories.

Eighth—Ratification of the proposed amendment to the federal constitution, providing for the direct election of U. S. Senators.

Ninth—Legislation looking to the improvement of the roads and highways of the state.

Tenth—Continuation of the reform in the conduct of the state penal institutions. Abandonment of present prison system. Recommends building of new penitentiary.

Eleventh—Regulation of the liquor traffic by strict control and license, when and where the people decide the traffic shall be lawful. A license amendment to the constitution was made at the special election, but the general assembly will have to provide regulatory measures.

The Little Mountain oil and gas well on the Hermlinge farm is still doing business at the old stand. Work was discontinued for a few days on account of the caving of earth but now new casing has been put in and the work is being pushed rapidly. In all three thousand feet of casing have been placed in the well. While no oil or gas in any quantity has been discovered, the drillers have not given up hope of locating a gusher. A great deal of money is being spent at the well.

Common sense will approve the decision of the Lake Shore railroad to decrease the running time of its most important trains between Chicago and New York from 20 to 18 hours. The fare between New York and Chicago is $20 for 28 hours. An extra fare of $10 was charged on the 18-hour trains, and of $5 on the 24-hour trains. For every hour the train was late $1 was refunded to each passenger. This system makes rates dependent upon speed. Are there people who would pay as much for a corresponding increase of safety? It is a bad case of speed mania, which manifests itself in so many departments of modern life.

At the meeting of the national association of automobile manufacturers in Detroit last week, there was much support of the demand for removal of the restrictions placed by Congress on the making of wood alcohol. The price of gasoline has been rising rapidly, and alcohol seems the only safe and reasonably satisfactory substitute. It is less efficient than gasoline, but it has the great advantage that the supply is inexhaustible. The motors can easily be adjusted to its use has been shown by ample experiment.

Margaret Simons, aged 11 years, was struck by an auto near her home east of Painesville, Tuesday, and almost instantly killed. The little girl had jumped from behind a wagon directly in front of an automobile driven by R. C. Moodey, of this city.

Ohio Supreme Court

For the first time in half a century a majority of the Ohio Supreme Court will be Democrats after Jan. 1.

When Oscar W. Newman, of Portsmouth, and Judge J. Foster Wilkin of New Philadelphia, elected last week, take their seats, four of the six judges of the state's highest tribunal will be Democrats, one will be a Republican, and one, Judge R. M. Wanamaker, of Akron, will be a Progressive, the first representative of the new party on the bench in Ohio or the United States.

The lone republican will be Judge John A. Shauck, of Dayton, who still has two years to serve. His only Republican colleague, Judge William T. Spear, will step down on December 31 after twenty-eight years of continuous service on the Supreme Court bench. He was a candidate for reelection for the short term, but was defeated by Judge Wilkin.

There are now three Democratic Supreme Court Judges—M. H. Donahue, James G. Johnson and Joseph W. O'Hara. The latter was appointed by Governor Harmon to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge James L. Brice last spring and might have had the Democratic nomination for the short term had he desired. At the end of next month he will retire to resume his law practice in Cincinnati.

The term of Judge William Z. Davis, of Marion, Republican, also expires this year. He has served twelve years.

A Good Old One

(From the Interior.)

An English paper reports the discovery of a real Mrs. Partington. She walked into the office of the judge of probate and inquired, "Are you the judge of reprobates?"

"I am the judge of probate," was the reply.

"Well, that's it, I expect," quoth the lady. "You see, my husband died detested, and left several little infidels; and I want to be appointed their executioner!"

Of Course, Advertise.

"Will you allow me to ask you a question," interrupted a man in the audience.

"Certainly, sir," said the lecturer.

"You have given us a lot of figures about immigration, increase of wealth, the growth of trusts, and all that," said the man. "Let's see what you know about figures yourself. How do you find the greatest common divisor?"

Then he pointed his finger straight at the questioner. Lightning flashed from his eyes, and he replied, in a voice that made the gas jets quiver:

"Advertise for it, you ignoramus!"

The audience cheered and yelled and stamped and the wretched man who had asked the question crawled out of the hall a total wreck.

Mrs. David Woodford of Mentor has been visiting her sons, David and Will Woodford.

The many friends of Mrs. Ann Adams were shocked to hear of her sudden passing away Monday, Nov. 11. Although she had been in poor health for some time no one was expecting the end was so near, and extend their sympathy to her son, Martin G. Adams, who lived with her, in his bereavement.

STAND-PATS BEGIN ATTACK ON BRYAN

REACTIONARY DEMOCRATS SAY NEBRASKAN MUST NOT INFLUENCE WILSON

Want President-Elect to Tell Commoner His Advice Isn't Needed.

(By Ben F. Allen)

Plain Dealer Bureau, 38 Post Bldg.
Washington, Nov. 19.

What will be the attitude of President-elect Wilson toward William Jennings Bryan?

This question suddenly has become the most absorbing, and in some respects, the most difficult problem facing the president-elect in his preparations for taking over the reins of the national government.

Developments the last two days have eliminated all chance of a compromise between the element in the Democratic party bitterly hostile to Bryan and the element believing in Bryan personally and what he stands for. Representatives of the ultra conservative wing of the Democratic party have resolved to force squarely before Gov. Wilson what they characterize as the Bryan issue.

The plan of these Democratic reactionaries has impressed Washington as being bold in the extreme. The Democratic standpatters propose that President-elect Wilson must sever all relations with Bryan. They want the new president to bluntly inform the Nebraskan that his advice as to the policy of the new administration is not wanted. Further, some of these Democratic standpatters propose that the tariff revision which Gov. Wilson and the Democratic party stand pledged must be sham revision, a revision which will not actually affect any of the privileges now enjoyed by the big protected interests.

Standpatters Are Sincere

At first these reports were taken as "a bluff." They were interpreted as being a part of a campaign to intimidate Gov. Wilson. That the standpatters, however, are not bluffing but rather propose to have their own way or do what they can to wreck the Wilson administration has been plainly revealed, Democratic congressmen believe, in the last forty-eight hours.

Although defeated in the Baltimore convention, the powerful Ryan-Belmont-Murphy influence persistently is working for the elimination of Bryan. Added in this combination is William R. Hearst, who from London has sent word that the Bryan influence must be broken, as far as the Wilson administration is concerned.

Complicating the situation for President-elect Wilson is the hostile attitude toward Bryan of Speaker Champ Clark and Representative Oscar W. Underwood, Democratic leader in the house of representatives. Today the Washington Post, owned by John R. McLean, who is closely associated with Hearst, said:

"Champ Clark, speaker of the house, and Oscar W. Underwood, majority leader, have informed their friends in Washington that they do not propose to submit to any effort by William Jennings Bryan to run the United States government in the next four years."

It is understood that the excuse of this belligerent announcement, an announcement which in itself shows that the fight is on to alienate Wilson and Bryan, was prompted by developments in connection with the recent visit of Bryan to Washington. The excuse for the declaration of war is that Bryan while here spoke of what he proposed to do in connection with the new administration and that he outlined both an executive and a legislative policy.

The effort to bring about ill feeling between Wilson and Bryan is resented hotly by the friends of the Nebraskan, conspicuous among which is Representative Robert Henry of Texas, chairman of the house rules committee and one of the most influential members of the Democratic majority. These friends of Bryan say the fight on the Nebraskan was certain to be made and that his visit to the capitol simply was seized upon as a convenient excuse.

Immediately leading up to the public declaration of hostility toward Bryan it seems was a dinner given to Bryan by Hannis Taylor, Cleveland Democrat, who served as United States minister to Spain during the Cleveland administration. The dinner was attended by a number of persons, including members of congress.

The opponents of Bryan are hinting that it was at this dinner the Nebraskan outlined what "He proposed to do in shaping the course of the new administration."

The version given by the friends of Bryan is that he made no statement of any kind that could be twisted into meaning that he expected to be dictator of the policies of the Wilson administration. On the contrary, it is explained that, as naturally might be expected, the views of Bryan as to the course the Democrats should follow were expressed at the dinner. In giving his views it is stated that Bryan talked in a most conciliatory manner, and that he expressed great satisfaction that no contest was to be made on Speaker Clark, saying it would be most unfortunate for the Democrats, at the outset of their period of control, to become involved in a fight over the organization of the house.

At this dinner it is stated, also, Bryan said he believed the wisest course to follow would be for the new congress to push through as rapidly as possible all the Underwood tariff bills enacted by the house during the last session, including those measures which got through the senate and were vetoed by President Taft. It is insisted that Bryan said he would advise putting these bills through without change, that the country understood them and it would grant a measure of relief while the new administration was considering the question of a complete schedule by schedule revision of the tariff.

At this dinner the friends of Bryan say he simply expressed his views as thus outlined, and did so at the request of and in response to the questions of other guests.

Coincident with the announcement that Speaker Clark and Representative Underwood proposed a hands-off policy as far as Bryan is concerned, came the information that Bryan was to be a guest of President-elect Wilson at Bermuda, and that he would go to the vacation retreat upon Gov. Wilson's invitation. The leaders among the radical Democrats in the house say this invitation is extremely significant. They say it means that there will be a perfect understanding between Wilson and Bryan, and that the standpat Democrats may go ahead with the efforts to hamper the Wilson administration. They say that if the fight between the conflicting elements in the party has to come, the sooner the better.

The Burial

(By PERCY SHAW, in American.)

By Percy Shaw

In sorrowing lines [illegible] the jungle they came,
Strange creatures by habit, strange creatures by name,
To grieve at the grave of the elephant who Met death in his tracks as good elephants do.

The bearers walked slowly with tears in their eyes
(But that might have been from the elephant's size);
They laid him down softly, while standing forlorn
A moose read the service with crepe on his horn.

They lowered him in and they hid him with sheaves
Of sweet smelling branches of tariff tree leaves,
While the donkey as digger dropped earth from above,
Like a mourner performing a labor of love.

The grave digger paused till the line passed from sight,
Then he patted the soil with a spade that was bright,
And spoke to the skies with heart-laden balloo—
"It depends upon me if he ever comes to."

GUNMEN ARE FOUND GUILTY OF MURDER

JURY OUT ONLY 27 MINUTES

Gangsters Return to Cells Profanely Denouncing Justice Goff and All the Others Concerned in In Their Trial.

New York City.—Guilty of murder in the first degree was the verdict returned by the jury in the cases of the four gunmen charged with the actual killing of gambler Herman Rosenthal.

Jury Out 27 Minutes.

The quartet that will now go to join former Police Lieutenant Charles Becker, "the brain of the conspiracy," in the death house at Sing Sing, is made up of Frank Muller, alias Whitey Lewis, Frank Cirofici, alias Dago Frank, Louis Rosenberg, alias Lefty Louis, and Harry Horowitz, alias Gyp the Blood.

The verdict was forecast by the action of the jury in refusing to go out to luncheon before being locked up to deliberate.

Only a small part of the crowd left the court room. It was considered certain the jury would be back soon, and this assurance was made certain when in exactly 27 minutes the jurors returned to their box.

"Gentlemen of the jury, have you arrived at a verdict?" demanded Clerk Penny.

"We find all four defendants guilty as charged in the indictment," solemnly answered the foreman.

Gangsters Denounce Judge.

Enraged by their conviction, the four gangsters returned to the Tombs profanely denouncing Justice Goff and all others who were concerned in their trial. Their counsel at once served notice of an appeal. Meanwhile, a great crowd outside the criminal courts building was attesting its approval of the verdict by cheering the departing jurors. District Attorney Whitman in a brief statement, congratulated the people of New York on the result of the trial which he declared was a triumph for civilization and the beginning of the end of gun rule in New York. Their agreement with the state fulfilled, Jack Rose, Bridgey Webber and Harry Vallon will be released from custody. The indictment against William Shapiro, chauffeur of the murder car, whose testimony against the four defendants is declared to have decided the issue, will also be dismissed and Sam Schepps will likewise be permitted to go free.

CONVICTED OF SLAYING WIFE

Aged Buckeye Man Is Found Guilty by Jury of Murder in the First Degree.

Medina, O.—Guilty of murder in the first degree with a recommendation of mercy. This was the verdict rendered against Christian Steuer, the 73-year-old man who murdered his wife Mary, 70, at their home on the farm four miles from this village. The aged man showed no emotion when the verdict was read. The recommendation of mercy will save the aged man from the electric chair, but will send him to the penitentiary for the rest of his life. The verdict was rendered on the third count of the indictment which said that Steuer killed his wife with some blunt instrument unknown to the jury. The first count said that he killed her with an ax, and the second count named a stick of stove wood as the instrument with which the aged woman was put to death.

Ferdinand's move comes close upon reports that his army has been checked in its march on Constantinople. It is not believed, however, that he will be forced to recede from the demands he has already made.

TO CALL EXTRA SESSION

WILSON WILL ASK CONGRESS TO ASSEMBLE IN APRIL.

President Elect Leaves for Bermuda, Where He Will Have a Four Weeks' Vacation.

New York City.—"I shall call congress together in extraordinary session not later than April 15. I shall do this not only because I think that the pledges of the party ought to be redeemed as promptly as possible, but also because I know it to be in the interest of business that all uncertainty as to what the particular items of tariff revision are to be should be revised as soon as possible."—Woodrow Wilson.

As he issued his statement the president-elect remarked: "The list of members of congress and prominent Democrats throughout the country who had expressed themselves on the subject showed that the sentiment in favor of the calling of an extra session was widespread. I might say almost unanimous."

The president-elect gave out his statement before embarking on his vacation.

Simultaneously with the issuance of his statement the president-elect gave permission to say that he is to spend his vacation in Bermuda. He sailed on the steamship Bermudian from the pier of the Quebec Steamship Co. at West 10th st. and North river, at 2 p. m. on November 16. Norwalk, O.—Ernest Welch, jointly indicted with five other young men of West Clarksfield on a charge of tarring 19-year-old Minnie La Valley on the night of Aug. 30, was found guilty of assault and battery by the jury before whom he had been on trial.

The charge of assault and battery was contained in the ninth count of the joint indictment. The jury reported it had found Welch not guilty of the technical charge of "riotous conspiracy," contained in each of the other eight counts in the indictment. Accompanying the verdict was a note from the jury to Judge John T. Garver recommending that Welch be given the extreme penalty for assault and battery, which is a fine of $200 and costs, or six months in the workhouse or jail or both. Judge Garver postponed sentencing Welch, releasing the defendant under his original bond of $500.

THINK SLAYER OF BOYS IS INSANE

THE NEW YORK POLICE TRY TO TRACE CONFESSED MURDERER OF TWO CHILDREN.

FIND PARENTS OF ONE VICTIM

Mother Whose Son Had Been Killed by Fiend Thinks Her Appeal For Vengeance Will Soon Be Answered.

New York City.—It has been learned by the police department that the confessed murderer of little Joseph Josephs of Lackawanna, N. Y., who also admits being the fiend who on Dec. 10, 1902, strangled 10-year-old Michael Kruck in Central Park, is suspected of being the insane member of a well known New York family.

At the time of the murder here in New York Detectives McCafferty and Price ascertained that a certain man then living on the West Side was the most likely person to have lured the innocent little boy to his death. They were developing several clues in this investigation and had learned that the family of the suspect had rallied to his defense. The "skeleton in the closet" had been carted away.

Then it was said at police headquarters the first definite clue regarding this man's guilt was received. It was in the form of a letter.

"This letter, strange to relate, was dated Buffalo, the city to which this present series of postal cards is being directed," said the official at police headquarters. "It told that the murderer of little Michael Kruck was not the Greek flower peddler or jealous newsboy as McCafferty and Price were quoted in the newspapers as suspecting, but a man who, when insane from drink, was possessed with an unconquerable desire to kill young boys.

"The inspector in charge of the detective bureau at that time at once assigned certain men to run down the writer of this letter. They were making good progress when suddenly all activity in the case seemed to cease and McCafferty and Price were put on other work."

McCafferty, who was later promoted to inspector in charge of the detective bureau, at present has charge of the Bronx detective bureau and is rated as the most skilled investigator in the department. He said that he has valuable information regarding the Kruck murder and intends turning it over to his superiors. Beyond this he refused to talk on the case. The police at once renewed activity in the matter however and began a series of inquiries.

One of the detectives sent out by Lieut. Mulligan of the West Side district located the present home of the Kruck family at 120 West 61st st. All facts regarding the murder of the young boy were detailed to him. The Kruck family consists of Henry D. Kruck, a tailor, with his shop at No. 119 W. 43rd-st, his wife Rose and four children, Miss Camille, seven years old, James, Harry and John. Mrs. Kruck has held special services every Saturday night for the heaping of vengeance upon the murderer of her son. She said that at last her appeal has been heard and she feels assured the fiend will soon be given his due.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The only important development in the mystery that surrounds the brutal slaying of Joseph Josephs, the 7-year-old boy, whose dismembered body was found in a cess pool was the receipt by Police Chief Gilson of Lackawanna of another letter from the confessed murderer. The letter was unsigned and merely stated that the writer would be in Lackawanna on Wednesday and would then give himself up to the police.

CANAL TO BE DONE IN YEAR

Such Is the Deduction From the Annual Report of Colonel Goethals for the Commission.

Washington, D. C.—That the Panama canal will be completed within the next 12 months is clearly indicated by Col. George W. Goethals in his annual report to the secretary of war, which was made public here. While the chief engineer of the biggest job on earth does not say in so many words that his labors will be through in a year, he contrasts the work that was done during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, with what work remains to be done and the reasonable deduction is that by this time next year the gigantic task will be at an end and vessels will be threading their way back and forth between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans through the world's greatest artificial waterway.

The most important work that is yet to be done is the completion of the lock gates.

Fight High Cost of Living.

South Bend, Ind.—Two thousand five hundred employes of the large Studebaker corporation, have organized to fight the high cost of living and will start with the co-operation plan of buying coal.

Good News for Baldheads.

Palo Alto, Cal.—Professor Frederick Migge, assistant in the anatomy department of Stanford University, has discovered a method of killing the microbes which prey upon human hair roots and which makes two hairs grow where none grew before.

RAIDS COVER 8 CITIES

POSTOFFICE INSPECTORS PLACE BROKERS UNDER ARREST.

Expose Alleged International Swindling Scheme in Which Investors Are Said to Have Been Mulcted.

New York City.—An alleged international swindling scheme, in which $3,000,000 is said to have been mulcted from investors, was exposed by simultaneous raids in eight cities of the United States by postoffice inspectors. The cities involved include New York, Boston, Newark, Buffalo, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Rochester and Washington. In each of these places the local offices of the alleged swindling companies were entered by government officials and the men in charge arrested and held in bail. The data on file in the offices was taken by the government inspectors.

In New York Mason O. Worth of the Worth, Bulnes Tavares Co., at 42 Cedar st., was arrested. He is charged with having sent letters through the mails with intent to defraud investors.

Simultaneously with raids at Rochester, Chicago, Philadelphia and other cities federal officers went to the offices of the Horace H. Hastings Co., 866-870 Rockefeller building, Cleveland, and arrested F. D. Minyard, manager of the concern, on a charge of using the mails to defraud in connection with the operations of the F. D. Minyard Co., brokers, Cincinnati.

Postoffice Inspector Ashton said the Hastings company was in no way connected with the alleged violation of law.

In Newark, N. J., A. Bruce Crone, a broker, was arrested. In Rochester every one connected with the American Redemption Co.'s offices was taken into custody and all papers and books confiscated.

LOOT OHIO BANK OF $4,000

Bandits Flourishing Revolvers Hold Off Residents of Village as Vault Is Blown Up.

Bowling Green, O.—Cracksmen, after five attempts, blew open the vault in the Munn bank at Portage, near here, and escaped with $4,006 in cash.

Bold and daring bandits flourishing revolvers patrolled the street in the vicinity of the bank, and warned citizens attracted to the scene by the explosions, to remain at a safe distance under penalty of being shot. Miss Ruth Ernsberg, telephone operator, watched the yeggmen operating and, despite a warning from one of them crawled on her hands and knees to a switchboard out of range of the robbers, and gave the alarm.

HOLDS BATHTUB CO. A TRUST

Supreme Court of United States Approves Dissolution Decree Against Sanitary Concern.

Washington, D. C.—The supreme court of the United States upheld the decree of dissolution against the Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Co. and allied concerns known as the "bathtub trust." The trust had been ordered dissolved by the federal court of Maryland as a combination in restraint of trade despite its contention the decree was an invasion of its patent rights. The decision was regarded by government "trust busters" as one of the most important since the Standard oil decree.

Chops Sister's Head Off.

Rawlins, Wyo.—Upbraided by his mother for abusing his sister, Mrs. Frank Ryder, Melvin Davis, 21, a miner, seized a rifle, fired at Mrs. Ryder, chased her into the yard of the Davis home and then beheaded her with an ax. Davis was captured later by a posse. He is in jail here. The death of Mrs. Ryder leaves six children motherless. Two of them witnessed her slaying. One of the little girls ran into the yard, and pleaded pitifully for the life of her loving mother.

Fights for His Life in Dark.

Chicago, Ill.—Police Sergeant John Grambler was commended by his chiefs for bravery here, after the officer had overcome a Lithuanian who had stabbed several men. The policeman followed his man into a coal tangle and mastered him there. Sergt. Grambler, although stabbed, used nothing but his club in conquering the man. Michael Kalcek, the prisoner, stabbed a man in a fight and also stabbed a bystander. He fled, with Grambler at his heels and dropped into a coal hole.

DUTCH ARE FRIENDLY

American Travelers Welcomed by the Netherlanders.

Looked Upon as Kinsmen—Hollanders Remember Important Part Played by Their Forefathers in the New World.

The Hague, Holland.—Recently, in a letter from Scotland I read that "Americans are unpopular in Europe." As far as Holland is concerned I cannot protest strongly enough against this statement. On the contrary, there is no foreign nation as popular in the Netherlands as America and there is no individual of any other nationality so well liked as the American.

The Dutch consider the Americans akin to themselves. They cannot forget that some of the eastern states were once known as New Netherland and that New York was first named New Amsterdam; that many of the leading Dutch families helped to colonize America; that most Dutch family names survive in some form or other on the other side of the Atlantic. There is scarcely a family that has not "a cousin in America" and the "American uncle" is unreservedly popular among all his relatives in Holland for all the thousands of dollars, real or imaginary, that some day he may leave to them.

The eyes of many a weary worker in Holland turn with longing toward America, that land of fabulous wealth in the same way that the Germans, during Holland's golden age, used to dream of Amsterdam, that city paved with gold. But, wiser than the German dreamer of old, the Hollander knows that gold is not to be picked up in the streets of the new world by the idlers, but must be gained by honest toil. The sons of many a Dutch farmer have found work and land and a permanent home in America, and when they return occasionally to visit the scenes of their childhood, these tell of the wondrous, progressive, energetic race across the sea, that is partly of their own blood, and so they widen the circle of sympathy for America and the Americans. No one who has seen how one private American citizen, of Dutch lineage, it is true, but certainly "a very American of the Americans," Theodore Roosevelt was received by the people of Holland, can doubt for a movement the truth that Americans are popular.

But it is very noticeable in many other ways. See the people's faces light up in smiles when they hear that their traveling companion in a railway journey is an American. Everyone is ready to point out places of interest to him, to help him in any difficulty and to hear his opinion about Holland. As a rule, Dutch people traveling and staying in hotels hold themselves stiffly aloof from others, but not from the American. These are privileged beings and are generally made much of, for there is something genial about them that seem to attract the less demonstrative nature of the Hollander. Why, even the American newspaper correspondents are popular in Holland and can obtain advantages denied to those of their colleagues of other nationalities, and even to the Dutch press itself. Perhaps the last is the strongest proof of any of America's popularity.

VISITED HEAVEN IN DREAM

Girl Says She Spoke to Mother, Sisters and Brother in a Trance

Chunky, Miss.—Physicians and psychologists are investigating the strange tale told by Miss Lulu Mae Satterfield, twenty years old, who awoke from a trance which she had entered upon several weeks ago, and after summoning about fifty relatives and friends to her bedside told a graphic story of how she had visited heaven during her long sleep and while there had talked with her mother, her sister and two brothers, all of whom have been dead for some time.

Miss Satterfield was in perfect health when she awoke from her trance, and declared that she felt refreshed although too weak from the long fast to leave her bed. Dr. William Walring, the physician who attends her family, was at her side when she told her strange experience and noted every word carefully.

The girl said that after talking with her mother, who died a year ago, she had been called before her Heavenly Father and ordered to return to earth and tell mankind of the glorious future that awaited them, urging them to live good lives.

The girl's discourse was perfectly coherent and she talked with such deep conviction that most of her hearers were in tears when she concluded. The young woman's father is the Rev. M. Satterfield, a Baptist minister, formerly of this town, but now occupied with a charge at Poplar Springs, five miles southwest of Hickory. The preacher declares that his daughter has always been devout and pious to the extreme.

HAPPIEST GIRL IN WORLD

Young Woman in Canada Declares She Would Rather Plow Than Go to the Opera.

Montreal.—"The happiest girl in all the world!" That is the distinction claimed by Miss Jack May, a slender bit of femininity, who owns and operates a farm in the wilds of Canada. Not many years ago Miss May, who is the daughter of Admiral May, of the British navy, was a frilly, frothy society belle, to whom the theater, balls and card parties represented all that was worth living for. When the Boer war broke out and, along with scores of other aristocratic young English women, she went to the front as nurse, her eyes were opened to the smallness of the butterfly existence she had been leading. Upon her return home she at once entered the Swanley agricultural college at Kent and at the conclusion of her course amazed her former fashionable friends by becoming manager of a dairy farm. After a time she became working manager of another farm in Kent, where she took active charge of all the work, grain growing, vegetable gardening and live stock. She went direct from that farm to the Canadian west, to a ranch of 320 acres near the Canadian Pacific railway, and now all English society is interested in watching her career. Not a man is employed on Miss May's entire farm. Her only companion and helper is a Canadian girl of sixteen.

Miss Jack May.

From Photo Taken When She Was an English Society Belle

"Go back to society again? Not for worlds," declares this former London favorite. "I would rather plow than go to the opera. I would rather plant corn than attend a pink tea and I much prefer currying my horses to arraying myself in an evening gown. What's a butterfly society life in damp and foggy England compared to real life in bright sunshine and bracing cold?" Miss May's success had made her views on agriculture much sought after, especially among the English immigrants.

Although this little English woman has sacrificed conventional feminine garb and has given up social life completely, she has lost none of the charm that made her a leader in British society circles. Her everyday costume consists of stout leather boots and leather puttees, riding breeches of heavy blue serge, a man's shirt, and a short khaki coat. When she desires to really "dress up" for special occasions, she wears a soft collar and tie, and a peasant smock of navy blue denim, which comes to her knees and is loosely belted around her waist. She is delightfully picturesque and her happy carefree laugh is a sure cure for the blues.

"I love the freedom of the life and the bigness of things here on the western prairies," she said, recently. "In England one is bound by conventions, as one's fields are girt with hedges. Here I can do as I choose. I would not go back to stay under any consideration."

RECOVERS RING FROM RIVER

Man Uses Cistern Cleaner to Draw Diamond From Deep Water at Connersville, Ind.

Lawrenceburg, Ind.—Jack Kauler, a cistern cleaner of Connersville, recovered a diamond ring belonging to George W. von Fange, an automobile salesman, from the bottom of the Ohio river with his cistern cleaning device.

Mr. Von Fange was the guest of Fred Wurst and was riding on the Ohio river in a motorboat. In taking some matches from his pocket his diamond ring, valued at $350, slipped from his finger and disappeared into ten feet of water.

Kauler, after three hours of work got the ring into the large tin can of his machine and brought it to shore. He obtained a liberal reward for his work.

HIS FORTUNE TO FEED POOR

Philadelphia Politician's Estate for the Needy of His Ward—Wealth Placed at $300,000.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The poor of the Sixth ward are the final beneficiaries of the estate of Thomas J. Ryan, Democratic leader and amusement promoter, who committed suicide October 6, and whose will was probated here. Mr. Ryan's widow will receive the income and such part of the principal as may be necessary during her life, the residue to be paid at her death to the St. Vincent de Paul society of St. Augustine's church to provide a fund for the purchase of flour, food and fuel for needy persons living in the ward, which Mr. Ryan represented for many years in select council. The estate is valued at $300,000.

HAS RECORD BALANCE

FISCAL YEAR ENDS AND STATE IS SHOWN TO BE AHEAD.

Receipts Exceed Expenditures by Nearly a Million Dollars, Saving Is Without Precedent.

Columbus.—For the fiscal year 1912 which ended November 15, the income of the state government exceeded its expenditures by over $900,000. Though the expenditures were the largest in the history of the state, the income was enough greater to make this unprecedented showing on the right side of the big ledger which State Treasurer Creamer keeps.

Receipts were $14,577,872.38; disbursements, $13,663,150.82, leaving a balance of $914,721.56. The 1911 figures were: Receipts, $13,037,293.01; disbursements, $12,932,343.97; balance, $104,949.04.

In 1910 there was a deficit, disbursements exceeding receipts by $507,742; and also in 1909, when disbursements exceeded receipts by $1,032,254.

One-third of this year's surplus, or $358,622.60, was increase in the saloon tax. The remainder of the surplus was caused by increase in the corporation taxes.

The state treasury is in a plethoric condition. The cash balance at the end of the year is $4,682,837.93, as compared with the cash balance November 15, 1911, $3,768,116.37.

Expenditures of the Committees

Campaigns made by Republican, Democratic and Progressive state committees cost in the aggregate only $143,000, a sum less than sometimes has been spent by one state committee, according to statements filed with Secretary of State Graves by William F. Burdell, treasurer of the Republican committee; Fred J. Heer, treasurer of the Democratic committee, and Walter F. Brown, chairman of the Progressive committee. The Republican expenditure was the largest and that of the Democrats, who won, the least. The Republican committee received $61,115.13 and expended $60,437.04, from which should be deducted $6,080 in certificates of deposit, a fund set apart to pay $43? of bills outstanding and to maintain state headquarters, leaving the net outlay $54,435. The Progressive committee expended its receipts, $49,178, and owes $1,042.74, a total expenditure of $51,220.74. The Democratic committee received $41,601.9? and expended $38,091.16. The cash balance is $3,510.79.

Will Ask Automobile Law

Automobilists of the state have taken part in the general rush that is to be made on the next General Assembly for new laws. They want to get one bill through to compel every one who drives a horse-drawn or other vehicle on the highways between 30 minutes after sunset and 30 minutes before sunrise to put on front and rear lights, visible at least 200 feet. The penalty they propose is $25 fine. The second bill is an amendment to Section 12,619 of the General Code, providing that whoever drives a motor vehicle in the absence of the owner or without the owner's written consent, if the value of the vehicle is $35 or more, be imprisoned in the penitentiary from one to seven years, and if the value is less than $35 be fined not more than $200 or imprisoned not more than 30 days. The bill is directed against "joy riders."

Ohio Causes No Delay

"No delay in bringing about the adoption of the income tax amendment to the United States constitution was caused by the failure until a few weeks ago of the resolution of the Ohio general assembly to reach the office of the secretary of state at Washington," said George S. Long, secretary to Gov. Harmon, "for two states must yet act before the adoption is accomplished. It was the governor's duty only to transmit the resolution as directed by the general assembly, and this office transmitted the two copies to the vice president and the speaker of the house as directed. When informed of the omission to send third copy to the secretary of state, copies were sent to the state department and also duplicates to the vice president and the speaker."

No More Monkeys Ready.

"No more rhesus," read a telegram that has reached the office of the state board of health from William Bartels Co., animal importers, of New York. The three words told that temporarily the supply of monkeys is exhausted, and that before any more orders in this country are filled, a new supply must be brought from India or Africa. As a result of the brief message, the work of the state board in the experiments relative to infantile paralysis is for the time being suspended and the experimenters must bide their time until more simians are received. The rhesus is a monkey of the Indian species and in his native home is held sacred.

Granted Permission to Sell Stock.

After being twice refused, the Ohio Traction Co., of Cincinnati, on a third petition filed with the public utilities commission, was granted permission to sell $750,000 additional capital stock to reimburse the income account from which expenditures have been made during the last five years. The commissioners explained that it had been made clear to them that the money for which the stock was asked had been taken from the treasury for extensions. The expenditures represent additional property.

Suffragists in Doubt.

Adoption of woman suffrage in several states at the general election has imbued Ohio suffragists with renewed vigor and they are beginning to seriously consider the plausibility of making equal suffrage an issue next year, through the initiative and referendum. Some, however, favor waiting until 1914. The proposition was discussed at a meeting of the executive committee of the Ohio Woman Suffrage association, and will be considered in the state convention.

Women Ignored.

Indignant because they were not invited to take part in the recent conference of the state board of administration and the board of charities, at which plans for extensive improvements to the state institutions were outlined, the members of the board of women visitors who held their quarterly meeting at the Hartman building, declared that they have been intentionally ignored by the other state officials and that their work, as now carried on, is fruitless.

Taking a gentle rap at those who had attended the meeting of the two boards, the women visitors maintained that even though they make investigations, they have no way of having any remedial action taken except at the pleasure of the other boards.

Think Motive Is Plain.

"We were appointed on the same footing as the board of charities," declared Miss Blanch Vignos, of Canton, president of the visitors' board, "and feel that we should have some recognition. What is the use of our board if we can get no results from the work we do? The fact of the matter is, some people do not want the work that is done from the woman's standpoint to be known."

The board, which is purely advisory at present, is composed of Miss Vignos, the president; Mrs. Mary Proctor Wilson, Lebanon, vice president, Mrs. Nathan Rosewater, Cleveland, secretary, Mrs. M. E. Rathburn, Rutland, Mrs. A. J. Slair, London, Miss M. Edith Campbell, Cincinnati. It was created in 1907 in order to bring about an inspection of the state institutions by women.

Two inspections of each institution are made annually and quarterly meetings are held for the purpose of conferring on the conditions found and to suggest remedies and improvements.

As a means of gaining recognition for the visiting board, Miss Vignos expressed the hope that women would be made eligible, by statute to hold public office.

"We were appointed as a separate board," she explained, "because at present a woman, strange as it may seem, can not hold place on other boards. Had the amendment to the constitution, Eligibility of Women to Public Office, carried, everything would have been settled, but the people did not seem to understand. We are hoping that something along that line will be soon carried into effect."

Saloonkeepers Seek Reimbursement

Liberal organizations all over the state are preparing to ask the legislature to reimburse saloonkeepers who will be legislated out of business. As soon as the license amendment goes into effect saloonkeepers in each city who are unable to secure licenses will be forced out of business. They will ask the legislature to pay a stipulated sum to each saloonkeeper who was in business at the time that the liquor license went into effect and was then forced to quit. It is also the intention of the liberal organizations to urge a graduated license fee, based on the amount of business done. The Anti-Saloon league will fight both these tentative plans. Every city, village and rural nook in the state will be flooded with petitions by the league, addressed to the legislature, demanding enactment of two temperance laws. One is to prevent shipment of liquor from wet territory in Ohio into any dry county or district. The other is a drastic measure for the removal of derelict mayors and other officials who refuse or fail to enforce the liquor laws and other statutes. It is proposed to confer this power either upon the governor or judges of common pleas courts.

Bankers Urge Blue Sky Law.

Ohio bankers will take steps before the coming general assembly to secure the enactment of laws intended to protect Ohio investors against get-rich-quick promoters and fraudulent schemers. At the council of administration of the Ohio Bankers' Association meeting here, action was taken approving the famous "blue sky" law of Kansas and appointing a committee to draft a similar measure for introduction in the next legislature. The men named for this committee were E. R. Fancher, vice president of the Union National Bank, Cleveland; I. M. Taggert, assistant cashier of the Merchants' National Bank, Massillon, and H. D. Peters, president of the Fairfield National Bank, Lancaster. This step was in compliance with recommendations unanimously adopted by the members of the state association at their annual convention held at Cedar Point.

Willis Tax Delinquents.

State Treasurer D. S. Creamer certified to the State Tax Commission 200 Ohio corporations that have failed to pay their Willis law taxes. The sums due aggregate $400,000. The Tax Commission certifies them over to the Attorney General for collection after a 15 per cent penalty has been added in addition to the penalty added by the Auditor of State for failure to pay on October 1.

Scarlet Fever at University.

Scarlet fever among students of Ohio State University is feared by the city health department. The first student to become ill with the disease is Wesley Mackstroth, who roomed at 67 West Tenth avenue and left for his home in St. Mary's. When health officers learned he had gone, they immediately notified the health department at St. Mary's. The students rooming at the house where he was will not be quarantined, but close watch will be given cases of illness in the neighborhood.

Capt. Wood to Receive Appointment.

Announcement was made at Dayton that Governor-elect Cox would appoint Capt. George H. Wood, of Dayton, as adjutant general to succeed Adjutant General Weybrecht. Captain Wood has been one of the most active members of the Ohio National Guard. He was a major in the Third Regiment and is a son of the late Gen. T. J. Wood, of Dayton. He has been a member of the staff of Gov. Harmon and also of Gov. Herrick. His family has been a military one for generations.

FIRE AT CIRCLEVILLE

CEREAL MILL AND RESIDENCE CONSUMED BY FLAMES.

Largest Conflagration in History of City Results in Destruction of Valuable Property.

Circleville, O.—Fire destroyed the mill, elevator and a warehouse of the Ohio Cereal Co., located in South Court street, a dwelling near by, partly gutted three residences, and for a time threatened destruction to the business section. A loss of $150,000 was entailed.

The conflagration was the largest in the history of the city and the local fire department was unable to cope with it on account of the low water pressure. The mill was owned by three Smith brothers and was insured for $50,000.

The blaze, which was discovered at 7 o'clock, was due, it is thought, to spontaneous combustion of grain in the drying room. There had been no fire under the boilers in the engine room since 5 o'clock. Five cars loaded with flour, which stood near the warehouse, were removed before the flames reached them.

A second warehouse and a stable were the only buildings of the milling plant which were not destroyed.

In the warehouse which escaped over 20,000 bushels of wheat had been stored recently and it was on this structure that the fire fighters concentrated their efforts.

GOVERNOR WILL INSPECT GUARD

Cincinnati, O.—Preparations for the annual convention of the National Guard association, composed of officers of the Ohio National Guard, which will be held in Cincinnati November 25-26, are being completed by the officers of the First Ohio infantry. Col. Meyer received a letter from Col. Zimmerman of Cleveland, O., president of the association, that Gov. Harmon and probably Gov.-elect Cox will review the dress parade to be given the night of November 25 at the armory. Plans and specifications prepared by Lieut. James for an indoor rifle range in the basement of the armory, have been approved and construction will be begun as soon as possible.

PROMINENT WOMAN IS DEAD

Springfield, O.—Mrs. Clementine H. Buchwalter, of this city, a prominent member of both National and State Federations of Women's clubs, died in a private sanitarium in Dansville, N. Y., where she went three weeks ago in the search of health. She was the wife of Capt. E. L. Buchwalter, a wealthy manufacturer. At the time of her death Mrs. Buchwalter was honorary vice president of the National Federation of Women's clubs and she served as president of the State Federation from 1904 to 1907.

SPRINGFIELD PLANT IS SOLD

Springfield, O.—The stock in the Springfield Light, Heat and Power Co., held by Springfield and Columbus stockholders, was sold to the Hodenpyl, Hardy & Co., of New York City, the deal having been completed in Columbus. It has not been officially announced what the holders of the newly acquired plant expect to do with the property. They have wide public utility interests and will, it is expected, combine the Springfield property with others in an operating company.

AGED WOMAN BURNED TO DEATH.

Lima, O.—Attracted by screams for help, Mrs. Myrtle Ryan, No. 211 Charles street, rushed into the back yard of her home, where she found her aged mother, Mrs. J. H. Long, completely enveloped in flames. Her clothing had caught fire from rubbish being burned by her in the rear of the lot. The aged woman fainted in her daughter's arms. She was carried into the house by neighbors, also attracted by her screams, where she died three hours later.

AUTO SKIDS; MAN KILLED.

Zanesville, O.—Harold Clawson, aged 30, of Malta, was killed when the auto in which he and J. E. McCoy, of this city, were riding skidded and plunged through a fence and over a 30-foot embankment near Duncan Falls. McCoy, who was married only recently, was uninjured.

OHIO POSTOFFICE ROBBED.

Columbus, O.—Burglars who broke into the postoffice at Orient, 12 miles southwest of Columbus, secured $300 in stamps and $115 in cash. The postoffice safe was opened with tools stolen from a Toledo & Ohio Central section house at Orient.

PRYOR RIDGWAY SHOT.

Dayton, O.—Pryor Ridgway was shot in the right leg. The shooting was accidental and occurred at the office of Dr. S. E. Hendren. The doctor had been hunting and was showing Ridgway how his gun operated.

ROBERT SMITH IS DEAD.

Columbus, O.—Robert S. Smith, 60 years old, treasurer of the Little Miami railroad, died suddenly here. Capt. Smith was born in Cincinnati.

CAR KILLS AGED MAN.

London, O.—Robert Murray, aged 70, was struck by an Ohio Electric car and received fatal injuries. His chest was crushed. He is survived by three sons and two daughters.

Zanesville, O.—Lemuel Johnson, aged 56, an invalid from rheumatism, was fatally burned here. Ashes from his pipe ignited his bed clothing and the lower part of his body was literally cooked before the flames were extinguished.

STUDY CAR SHORTAGE

State Commission and Railroad Men Hold Meeting at Columbus.

Columbus, O.—Secondary connecting lines retaining cars for their own use was the general reason given to the state public service commission, which held a hearing for the purpose of learning the cause and possible relief of the fall shortage of coal cars and which has led to a rise in coal and inability on the part of many local dealers to deliver orders. Officials of coal-carrying railroads testified. A few coal operators listened to the testimony. All railroad men declared conditions slowly were improving.

The railroad representatives were practically agreed that the principal cause of the difficulty was the practice of their secondary connecting lines holding cars. They have been willing to pay the per diem of 35 cents a day, which is to be increased to 45 cents after January 1, because they have found it cheaper to rent cars than to purchase new ones. Ohio roads say that the worst offenders are the Western lines that converge in Chicago.

HUNTING SEASON

Opened in Ohio and Kentucky Fields and Forests.

Cincinnati, O.—The hunting season is open and many hunters have been bagging quail and rabbits. Gun and ammunition dealers have been busy for several days supplying sportsmen with their shells and putting guns in order. Sportsmen have not shown so much enthusiasm over a season in years as they have this fall, and on every hand is heard talk of the "hunt." Most of them will stay in Ohio, though some will go into Kentucky and Tennessee. In fact, more Ohio hunters are going into Tennessee this year than ever before, according to local sportsmen. Birds in Ohio are not as plentiful as usual because of the severity of the past winter. The winter season was so long and so much snow covered the ground that young quail starved. Reports from Kentucky and Tennessee, however, are more optimistic.

The season for quail and rabbit in this state closes on the evening of December 4. In Kentucky, however, one may hunt this game until January 1, and the wild turkey season there extends from September 1 until February 1. Woodcock and Carolina dove can be killed in this state during the quail season, and coon can be killed from November 1 to March 1. Twelve quail in one day is the limit for a hunter. Pot-shooting is tabooed as heretofore, and pheasants are protected until next year, though they may be shot in Kentucky.

Another good thing for nimrods to bear in mind is the fact that they will bump up against the Kentucky game wardens if they shoot ducks or geese on the Ohio river without first obtaining the Kentucky license, which costs $15. Water fowl below the low water mark on the Ohio side are declared to be in Kentucky, and hunters who shoot them in the middle of the river without Kentucky license lay themselves liable to the wrath of Game Warden Quincy Ward or some of his deputies.

Before entering a man's premises in Ohio the hunter must first obtain the written consent of the owner. This rule is being enforced strictly in this state, as well as other rulings of the Fish and Game Commission.

TO SEE THE PRESIDENT.

Columbus, O.—Prize winners in the Ohio boys' corn growing contest will be received at the white house the afternoon of December 6. President Taft will welcome the delegation to the capital and each and every one of the youngsters will have an opportunity to shake the presidential hand. It is expected there will be at least 200 boys in the party, representing every county in Ohio. It is possible that Gov. Harmon will accompany the boys on the trip.

GETS A $5,000 VERDICT.

Columbus, O.—Asking $2,294.50 in his petition for damages alleged to have been sustained in a West Side street car accident, Dr. Robert O. Noble received at the hands of a jury in Judge Bathmell's court a verdict for $5,000. The accident happened July 7, 1911, in front of the Columbus State hospital. Dr. Noble was in his auto when it was struck by a street car.

HUNTER KILLS A BABOON

Hamden, O.—A specimen of prize game was "bagged" by Samuel Gillen, jr., who shot and killed a baboon that was roaming in the woods near Jackson Furnace, south of here. It is thought the baboon escaped from a menagerie.

COMRADE OF BRICE DIES

Marysville, O.—Jacob Fist, aged 74, a veteran of the civil war, who was a comrade of the late Senator Calvin S. Brice, serving in Company H, 108th regiment, O. V. I., died from a complication of diseases.

MANY KILLED BY DYNAMITE

Wilmington, O.—By a premature discharge of dynamite while blasting stone near Westboro, Charles Conrad, aged 30, was instantly killed.

Bellefontaine, O.—Five years ago Hardin county newspapers announced the death of Thomas Dean. Recently Dean published a statement in the newspapers that the announcement of his death was a mistake. He has been in the West.

Marysville, O.—Francis T. Arthur, former clerk of the courts and representative of Union county, was stricken with paralysis at his home and his condition is critical. Arthur is past 72 years of age. He is a veteran of the civil war.

HIDDEN CHURCHES OF BEROEA

Edifices Were Refuges for Macedonian Christians From Turkish Persecution.

Beroea.—By far the most interesting sight to the modern traveler in Macedonia, says the Christian Herald, is that of the "hidden churches" of Beroea. I have consulted many volumes of commentaries and descriptive writings, the scanty guide books of Macedonia and all other available sources of information and find no remotest allusion to this most interesting feature of Beroea.

Even the missionaries and Greek Christians of Salonica, 40 miles away, so far as I could learn, had never heard of them. There are no less than 72 of these hidden churches which were tucked away in all sorts of obscure and undreamed of corners, when some hundreds of years ago the Greeks were in deadly fear of Turkish persecution.

Typical Greek Street.

No outward sign gave a hint that a church was anywhere in the vicinity, but our guide led us through crooked, narrow streets with overhanging balconies whose upper stories almost touched each other, then would enter a courtyard where a family or perhaps a dozen families lived and where the housemothers were cooking the noonday meal or doing the weekly washing. Out of this courtyard another door would open into a still narrower yard, and there at the end perhaps we would see a door with a rude cross marked in charcoal or in chalk upon it.

One of the inhabitants of this inner courtyard would be found to have the key of the door and, opening it, would usher us into a tiny church, perhaps not more than ten feet square, but in it we would always see one or more icons or pictures of Christ and the saints, covered with tinsel or gold foil except for their hands and faces. There would also be a row of candle spikes on which to impale the tapers so freely used in Greek worship, an altar, and a holy of holies behind a painted curtain.

Some of these churches were much larger than such a one as I have described and on the further side there was often a way of egress, sometimes an underground passage, so that if the persecuting Turks should catch the worshippers at their devotions they might escape massacre by flight.

ARRESTED FOR DOG'S TRICKS

Railway Station Blocked by Impromptu Circus Performance at Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Because his trained dog performed tricks in Broad street station and caused a crowd to collect, Arthur Randall of 1518 Rittenhouse street, was arrested and arraigned before Magistrate Track, sitting in the Twentieth district police station. He was discharged after being reprimanded. Randall went into the station with his pet water spaniel on a leash. When his pet began to display the more than ordinary acquirements of the dog Special Policeman Horn demanded that the exhibition cease, and it was upon this ultimatum that the policeman and the owner of the dog took issue. A lively argument followed which resulted in the arrest of Randall.

FISH WORMS LEGAL TENDER

Barber Gives Shave for Each Can of Bait Brought to Shop by Illinois Farmer.

Mount Carmel, Ill.—Fish bait at present is one of the scarcest commodities to be found in this city and vicinity and fishermen are most numerous.

As a result many of the small boys are working overtime digging worms for a lively market.

Everett Deffindall, a barber, however, has outwitted them all in the matter of obtaining worms.

He made a contract with a farmer near the city, on whose place worms grow big and thick, to give him a shave for each can of worms he got.

The plan has worked handsomely, the farmer coming in to town regularly to get his shave, with a can of wigglers.

Urge Sterilization of Defectives.

New York.—Before the Technicological society, Dr. Charles L. Dana of Cornell urged the sterilization of defectives, to prevent an increase in the feeble-minded and abnormal portion of our population.

THE QUIET HOUR

"HOLY OF HOLIES" OUT OF FASHION

THE "Holy of Holies" has gone out of fashion. There are no longer any sanctities which the world is bound to respect. From the bed of birth to the bed of earth, man's life—and even woman's—is fit subject for "copy" for the newspaper, the novelist and the college professor. It took all the power of the New York city police department to keep the photographers away from the reunion of the Titanic survivors with their loved ones. More than one bridegroom has proved his prowess by smashing a newspaper camera. In the bright lexicon of today there is no such word as reserve. That some of the great sentiments of life may be held in reverent silence is contrary to the present mode. It may become the fashion for men to advertise in the "personal" column of the newspapers that they really love their wives. Nothing nowadays "goes without saying." So we have Mothers' days, and everybody who loves mother must wear a white carnation in his buttonhole to the shame of the rest of us who do not.

If we are to have a celebration and a society for every virtue, we shall have no time for the exercise of these virtues, but must give ourselves to the important business of keeping this admirable machinery going. Obviously, and indisputably, if we have a Mothers' day we must also have a Fathers' day, for dad pays the freight, and makes possible the buying of flowers that adorn the holiday. Also he fulfils various other useful functions, although it is not greatly the vogue to talk about father. He is merely background.

Of course, and beyond question, if we give mother and father their due, we cannot go back on grandmother, bless her heart! Perhaps if we hire enough bands and adopt the right floral emblem—the Wayfarer nominates the chrysanthemum, as symbolizing at once the autumn of life and the unostentatious character of these special days—a Grandmothers' day will help restore to us the race of dear old women who we knew when we were young, and who are ever so much more desirable than the numerous massaged, pompadoured, tailor-made, sophisticated, never-grow-old ladies who awe us now at swagger restaurants and social functions.

And shall we not have a Big Sisters' day? Her day seems long in coming, and she toils and sacrifices for the whole household. Especially would the Wayfarer insist upon honoring her, a little later on in her career, by an Old Maids' day. This is really essential to any equitable adjustment of the scheme of things. Some day an orator or essayist will win immortal fame by setting forth in terms the office and works of the Maiden Aunt, the prop of dependent or selfish parents, and the slave and guide and friend of the children of those parents. There is a high seat in heaven for the unhonored and uncommemorated Old Maid Aunt. In passing, let it be emphasized that there is to be no honor shown the Old Bachelor; he is deserving of no consideration whatsoever. He is the saddest word of tongue or pen.

Resisting the temptation to extol the glories of a Faithful Lovers' day and a Husbands' day, and more particularly of a Wives' day (for to merge these into Mothers' day and Fathers' day is to assume, modern fashion, that the standpoint of the children is the supreme concern of matrimony), the Wayfarer moves on to indicate the high importance of founding certain societies to commemorate the cardinal virtues; since nowadays virtue seems not to be virtue unless it wears a badge, possesses a diploma and employs a press agent. The Wayfarer is well aware that he is not a pioneer in this project. It was but a few days ago that the pastor of a large church proposed in all seriousness that he would like to give up his charge and devote himself to establishing a Society for the Promotion of Democracy. The dearth of associations for the furtherance of the obvious probably had appealed to his progressive mind. So the Wayfarer has contemplated the glorious future of a Society of Men Who Do Not Beat Their Wives, and of allied organizations of Men Who Do Not Smoke, of Devotees of Non-dancing, of the Virtuous Company of Gentlemen Who Never Stay Out Late.—Exchange.

Pure in Heart.

The world would be 100 per cent better off if everybody read every morning or even every Sunday morning the first 12 verses of the Sermon on the Mount (Matthew v.), candidly, sincerely, understandingly. It is generally believed that the ethics of this sermon are so finely drawn, so delicately expressed that it cannot be applied to everyday practical life. But that is a great mistake.

Take the one, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." That is as true as a rule in arithmetic. There is nothing transcendental about it. A man who is pure in heart is certain to see God wherever he looks—in the flowers, the stars, the trees, in the charities, good works and aspirations of men, in historic events and great deeds. It is perfectly ridiculous to say that a man with an impure heart can see these things. He sees the very opposite. He sees the devil, from whom he gets all his wrong impulses.—Ohio State Journal.

Attend to the matter which is before thee, whether it is an opinion or an act or a word.—Franklin.

"Her landlady persuaded her to quit coffee and use Postum and in a few days she was entirely free from headache." (Tea is just as injurious as coffee because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.) "She told her employer about it, and on trying it, he had the same experience.
"My father and I have both suffered much from nervous headache since I can remember, but we scoffed at the idea advanced by my sister, that coffee was the cause of our trouble.
"However, we finally quit coffee and began using Postum. Father has had but one headache now in four years, due to a severe cold, and I have lost my headache and sour stomach, which I am now convinced came from coffee.
"A cup of good, hot Postum is satisfying to me when I do not care to eat a meal. Circumstances caused me to locate in a new country and I feared I would not be able to get my favorite drink, Postum, but I was relieved to find that a full supply is kept here with a heavy demand for it." ## WILSON'S ELECTION

Mr. Wilson was nominated against the opposition of all the "machines" in that party, political and industrial and in direct response to the demands of its genuinely progressive elements. He was elected by progressives of all parties, regardless of whether they all voted for him or not.

That the party vote of the Democratic Party was largely for Wilson after his nomination, is but a phase of the situation. It goes to show that more is to be gained for progressivism by getting control of an old party than by trying to make a new one. The force of party habit, which usually tells against a new party, may be thus secured for the new policies a new party would proclaim.

By a new party within the old one, not by the Democratic Party of unsavory tradition, was Mr. Wilson elected.

This new party was born with Bryan's nomination in 1896. It was fostered by "Bryanism" through the next decade and a half while plutocracy and an unawakened democracy in both parties were joined together for its destruction. It came to full vigor through Bryan's service last summer, and the Progressive Party revolt—a Republican repetition in different form in 1912 of the Democratic quarrel of 1896, helped bring it into power through Wilson's election last week. All that remains to complete this triumph of progressivism is for the President-elect to recognize in his administration and leadership the true nature of the trust that has been reposed in him.

To urge Mr. Wilson to be President of the whole people, would be an empty commonplace. This is his plain duty of course, and no one doubts his purpose in that respect. But even as he is to be more than an executive of the national law, so has he a larger function than that which the political commonplace of "representing all the people" implies. He has been elected to represent, in the highest office in the land, a certain kind of public policy—a sentiment and a policy that have had no competent and faithful representative in that office for half a century or more. On his fidelity to these obligations will his loyalty to his leadership trust be tried. It is not as a party Democrat that he goes into office, but as a democratic Democrat, and at every turn his good faith and ability in this respect will be the test of his career.

That President Wilson will be true to the ideals of fundamental democracy, and to the progressive policies (both the radical and the ameliorative) which spring out of those ideals and tend toward their full realization, he has given all citizens who voted for him intelligently every fair reason to believe. His words have been assuring, his deeds reassuring. He has courageously defied bosses, of the sordidly industrial as well as the crookedly political order, when his own fortunes were in the balance and they seemed to hold the scales and also the sword. With no indifference to individual suffering from industrial maladjustments, and every disposition to secure relief through progressive laws, he has nevertheless never seemed to lose sight of the difference between temporary amelioration of industrial suffering and permanent eradication of industrial wrong.

One absolutely necessary condition of eradicating industrial wrong is Freetrade, and this of course President Wilson cannot give. But he can promote the fiscal policies that make against Protection, which is the antithesis of Freetrade, and this much he has undertaken to do. Should he be recreant, should party loyalty of the old kind overcome his loyalty to progressive principles, should he fail to realize that both the old parties are dead, then let the political anathema that fell upon President Taft overwhelm President Wilson. Then let the progressives of both parties make instant and common cause against him, against his administration, and against the old party that will utter all have proved too tough for the new party within its shell. Then let there be a Progressive Party, either the present one of that name or a greater one with another name, which shall not only renounce allegiance to both the old parties but renounce also the Protection fetich and the folly of attempting to regulate trusts weakly with the left hand while rearing them powerfully with the right. Let all this be, if President Wilson, disappointing the progressive sentiment that has so cordially trusted him, proves unfaithful to the new party of the old name of which Bryan at Baltimore made it possible for him to be the standard bearer.

But meanwhile, may not every progressive of whatever party, unless obsessed with a hostile personal or party idolatry, be relied upon for good feeling, good cheer, and good service? Surely genuine Progressives will give aid and comfort now, not to the common enemy, Plutocracy, but to the democratic Democracy and its Presidential representative, and continue to give it so long as the one is faithful and the other loyal.—Chicago Public.

Sooner or later a whole lot of people are going to find out that the Republican party is about the livest corpse ever.—Telegraph-Republican. Probably it is a disembodied soul. We'll look out for ghosts.

The country would be disappointed if that good man Woodrow Wilson should forget to reward Dr. H. W. Wiley for his good and faithful services rendered Mr. Wilson and the country at large in the late unpleasantness.

President-elect Wilson has chosen to settle the extra session question by announcing his purpose to call one not later than April 15 for the purpose of revising the tariff. The uncertainty as to when the revision would come is now removed, but there was very little uncertainty after all that an extra session next spring would be part of the Wilson program. The overwhelming preponderance of opinion in the democratic party, it appears, supports the course the president-elect has decided upon. And so far as business is concerned, the sooner the better.

Call That Jack Welcomed

A man-o'-warsman on visit to his native city of Liverpool, gave an amusing instance of the readiness and resources of naval seamen. He had made an arrangement at Portsmouth to meet a chum from his own ship, but he had forgotten the number of the house and he did not care to knock at every door until he came to the right one. A rag and bone man with a bugle passed along. Jack seized the bugle.

"I'm looking for a chum," he explained.

Then he blew the grog call of the navy. As the last note died away a window was hastily flung up and a sailor's head was thrust out.

"Ah," said Jack, as he handed back the bugle. "I knew I'd find him. He's never missed that call yet!"

And a few minutes later the sought-for tar explained sorrowfully to his chum:

"You've given me away all right. I'm courtin' the gal there, and told them that I was a teetotaller, but her father is an old salt and knows the call."—London Tit-Bits.

DESIGN FOR SILK STOCKINGS

Oriental Characters Are the Latest to Be Used by Those Who Like Embroidery.

Girls who are fond of needlework will want to embroider themselves two or more pairs of silk stockings in the now fashionable Oriental designs.

Select a good grade of silk stocking woven with thread silk, black or any color you desire; then with a sharp-pointed piece of tailor's chalk outline a design representing some curious Chinese or Japanese symbol, lettering or number.

These can be found in any Oriental shop or on a Chinese laundry check. They are not difficult to sketch, being for the most part broad lines crossing each other in a curious manner.

These should be slightly padded with very soft darning cotton, so that the center will be raised above the outer edge. The embroidery is then done in fine floss silk, using brilliant red, green, yellow, purple and blue. All colors rich in tone are effective, and occasionally threads of silver and gold can be introduced in the embroidery.

Care must be taken when applying the work to colored stockings that the colors used in the embroidery harmonize with that of the stocking itself. Any color or combination of colors can be used on black.

Tiny beads and small flowers are lovely when worked in rich Oriental colors. For example, a spray of wistaria is charming on violet silk stockings. Cherry blossoms on white or green, iris on blue or yellow, and the flaming poppy on black.

When working, an easy way to keep the stocking taut so the embroidery will lie smooth is to slip a china egg or very smooth darning egg into the stocking, then hold the silk tightly over that as you would for ordinary darning. The embroidery will then be perfectly smooth when worn.

Tinting Lace.

A weak solution of permanganate of potash will tint laces that deep shade of ecru so much used at present.

It must be carefully dissolved, otherwise it will produce stains which are impossible to remove.

Test the dye with a small piece of muslin before dipping the lace. If the color is too deep, dilute the solution until the required hue is obtained. Never allow the lace to remain in the dye; simply dip in and out again.

Tea or a solution of coffee is excellent to tint laces. The latter produces the fashionable string color.

Lace trimmings to match the material of the frock are much used this season.

POULTRY COOPS OF PAPER

Successful Fancier Declares They Are as Warm as Others That Are Built of Wood.

Everybody in Marblehead, Mass., knows Frank Brown. Although his business is that of a grocer he keeps poultry on the side and is especially enthusiastic over a flock of games, one pullet having laid 195 eggs in nine months. Mr. Brown keeps his pet birds in a little house in the rear of his store, but most of his hens are kept on a half-acre of ledge on which a little soil appears in patches. He also has ducks and geese and pigeons.

A large number of the fowls are successfully kept in houses made of paper. In the coldest weather the hens live in these houses and seem as comfortable as those in the frame building. These houses are long enough to be divided into several pens. One of them has been in use seven years. In making these houses a light frame is put up and poultry wire is stretched tightly over it and heavy tarred paper laid over the wire. The paper is given a heavy coat of paint inside and out. The outside color is red, but white is used inside to enhance the light.

Being in the heart of the town, night prowlers are to be looked for, but any activity on their part during the summer is prevented by the presence of Mr. Brown's son, who has a tent in one corner of the half acre, where he spends the night. His sleep is seldom disturbed, except when he finds it necessary to get up and shoot a few rats. In his war on these pests he is aided by a nimble Irish terrier.

Both Mr. Brown and his son say that paper houses for poultry are a distinct success. There is seldom a frozen comb, even when the mercury drops below the zero mark, and the hens lay well. The houses are so tight that an opening has been made above each window, which is covered with burlap for ventilation.

Mr. Brown hatches several thousand chicken each season, all of them in incubators. These machines hold between 200 and 300 eggs each. Hot water supplies the heat, and gas heats the water.

But Electric Bitters kill and cast out the malaria germs from the blood; give you a fine appetite and renew your strength. "After long suffering," wrote Wm. Fretwell, of Lucama, N. C., "three bottles drove all the malaria from my system, and I've had good health ever since." Best for all stomach, liver, and kidney ills. 50 cents at Gehring's Pharmacy.

I thought that was too funny for anything and wanted to laugh the worst way, but did not dare."—Two Years in the Forbidden City, by the Princess Der Ling.

Man Need Help—Not Charity.

There is a higher duty than to build almshouses for the poor, and that is to save men from being degraded to the blighting influence of an almshouse. Man has a right to something more than bread to keep him from starving. He has a right to the aids and encouragements and culture, by which he may fulfill the destiny of a man, and until society is brought to recognize and reverence this it will continue to groan under its present miseries.—Channing.

Peculiar Inscription.

Not many years ago, in the Temple Court, London, was a sun dial with the motto "Be gone about your business." It is, of course, not easy to estimate the amount of food consumed by each of us in a year, but one dietetic expert who kept a record of his menus during twelve months declares that he ate 180 loaves of bread, 180 pounds of meat, drank 61 gallons of milk and ate no fewer than 300 eggs, in addition to other things.—London Tit-Bits.

GOOD AND BAD ATHLETICS

Authority Gives a List of Those Which She Advises Girls to Give Up or Avoid.

Miss Elizabeth Burchenal, inspector of athletics for the board of education of New York city, who recently made a study of athletics for girls, with the object of determining what kind of athletics are really helpful to girls, and what kind harmful, has interviewed forty women, all graduates of physical training schools and all of whom have had either practical experience in athletics or else opportunities of observation. As a result of their statements and of her own experience she has listed as condemned athletics for mature girls the broad jump, the high jump in competition and pole vaulting, and as doubtful for the mature girl the high jump, running more than 100 yards in competition and weight throwing. For the immature girl the condemned athletics are running more than 100 yards, pole vaulting and weight throwing, and the doubtful athletics are basket ball and field hockey.

The safe athletics for mature girls include, according to Miss Burchenal's investigation, archery, ball throwing, basket ball (women's rules), climbing, coasting, dancing, field hockey, golf, horseback riding, cross and side saddle, indoor baseball which is played in the open air, low hurdles not in competition, skating, skiing, snowshoeing, swimming, tennis and walking.

As especially beneficial for the mature girl Miss Burchenal lists climbing, dancing, jumping, in moderation, running, in moderation, and not in competition; skating, swimming and walking.

All Painesville Coughing

Death from a gun-shot wound less to be feared than Death from pneumonia.

A great number of our city's men, women and children have colds and coughs today. The air seems to be fairly laden with these throat and lung troubles. There is great danger of contracting pneumonia or consumption from them. Nearly [illegible] has its beginning in a cold or cough and many people die as a result. Beware!

A sudden chill, stupefying fever, sore throat, hoarseness, running nose, racking cough, rattling and wheezing in chest, painful breathing signify that your cold borders on pneumonia.

There are many remedies offered for colds, but there is one certain, reliable article that we know well: Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. It is best for soothing and subduing the inflamed, sore bronchial tubes and lungs. It wards off pneumonia. It checks cough at once. Cuts a cold short. Don't wait to see if your cold or cough wears away of itself, as pneumonia may come over night.

Test it first by sending a postal for a free sample. Address A. C. MEYER & CO., Baltimore, Md. But do not delay, get a regular bottle of the remedy, price 25 cents, from your druggist today. This is the best advice we can give—avoid pneumonia. (ADV.)

MENTOR

The weather was fine until the last part of the week, when it began to threaten snow, and grew dark and gray and "melancholy." What snow fell, soon melted off; but the gray threatening sky still remains.

The ladies of the Disciple church have decided on the fourth of Dec. as the best time for their bazaar and supper, but the place for holding same has not been handed in to us yet, probably has not been decided upon.

Mr. and Mrs. Omer Crawford of Cleveland were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sandberg over Sunday. Mr. Crawford used to live in Mentor on the John McClelland farm, which was afterwards owned by E. T. C. Aldrich, and which is now the property of W. P. Murray. His father died some years ago, but his mother is still living, and makes her home with her oldest daughter, Mrs. Guy Prouty, here in Mentor.

The folks who went to the Methodist meeting-house on Sunday, were all treated to a good talk by Mr. Raweiss, the New Zealander, who gave the first entertainment in our Village Hall Saturday evening, the first in the winter's course. Mr. Raweiss was assisted by his wife, son and daughter, and by means of story, costume and song, gave a most unique and delightful entertainment. It is almost needless to say that he made clear the great improvement in the condition of New Zealand and gave the credit entirely to the work of the missionaries. Anybody who does not believe in missions (and we have seen such), ought to see and hear what the "Raweiss" family have to say about it.

Mr. Will Hagenberger has been on the sick list this past week, and is still under the doctor's care, threatened with fever.

The Miscellany Club are to hold their anniversary meeting at the Cowles House in Painesville this week Wednesday evening, the social committee, consisting of Mrs. Justus, Mrs. Warren, Mrs. Carleton and Mrs. Spindle having the program in charge. The next regular meeting is to be held with the King sisters on the afternoon of the 27th.

Several of our people attended the District Convention held in the Disciple church in Glenville last week, among them were Dr. and Mrs. Clark, Mrs. Radcliffe and Mrs. Grier.

Mrs. Charles Justus recently made a birthday party for her husband, at which the guests all had an unusually splendid time.

A few of the Mentor people attended the Chrysanthemum Show held up in Cleveland this past week, though not quite as many as usual.

The union Thanksgiving services are to be held in the Disciple church on Sunday morning the 30th, instead of Thursday the 28th, the change being made to accommodate some who wish to go out of the village for the day.

This is to be Home Mission Week in Lake County and Dr. Vincent of Chautauqua fame is to be in attendance at most of the sessions, speaking at Vesper service in the college building at 4 p. m. on Sunday, and in the Painesville Methodist church in the evening. Any one who has never had the pleasure of listening to Dr. Vincent, should by all means go out to some of the services held by him during the week.

Dr. J. W. Lowe and family are to leave for Eustis, Florida, on Tuesday of this week, and will doubtless remain away until sometime in April or May.

Mr. Job Sweet was the guest of his brother, Mr. Mahlon Sweet of Kirtland one day last week, as they were getting ready to leave for their Florida home in Eustis for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Jackson write from Miami, Florida, of the delightful weather down there, and of the wonderful growth of the place, all Florida seeming to be having a boom just now, said boom having received a great impetus by the frightful cold weather of last year. Should we have a fairly mild winter here, people would begin to think that home was the best place after all.

Ladies of the Methodist Aid Society are to hold their bazaar in the parlors of the church building on the afternoon and evening of the 26th, which will be next Tuesday. Besides having things to sell, they propose to serve a chicken-pie supper for twenty-five cents, the tables to be ready at six o'clock sharp, and everybody is invited to come, buy and eat. Object, the pipe organ fund.

We were told several days ago, that the old Parker home owned by Mr. John Oliver, and rented to the Y. M. C. A. boys for their meetings, has been so badly misused that he has refused to rent again. Some of our Mentor boys declare the Y. M. C. A. boys were not the ones who have damaged the building but others. It does seem too bad that everybody cannot respect the rights of others, and so take as good care of the property belonging to another, as though it were his own.

Mrs. Charles Sandberg gave a Thimble party a few days ago, to some thirty of her friends, who enjoyed themselves most thoroughly.

The most delightful afternoon party of the entire year was given by Mrs. Charles Church and her sister, Mrs. Will Morley, recently, and which in the multitude of items we clear forgot to write up last week. Some thirty or forty ladies were present, Mrs. Squires coming up from Kirtland, Mrs. Warren from South Mentor, and Mrs. Ed Darber was expected from Painesville and looked for, but was detained at home. Miss Eleanor King read a story by Miss Florence Morse Kingsley, upon the "Transfiguration of Miss Philura," which caused considerable discussion. Some excellent music was given and then delicious refreshments were served. As the guests were leaving, we heard them all say, one after another—"We have had the best time ever, we never had such a good time before in the world," etc.

Miss Ida Merkle was intending to leave here on Friday for a visit with friends in Michigan of some days.

Mrs. Byron Helman, nee Miss Ada Taylor of Cleveland, has been a recent guest of Col. and Mrs. Spaulding.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Luth of Painesville have been spending a short time out here with Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Stoll, the parents of Mrs. Luth.

Mr. Bert Smith of Cleveland returned from his trip to New York and Philadelphia one day last week, and spent a short time here with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Smith, before beginning work again in the city.

Mrs. Albert Hanson writes home from Winnipeg, that deep snow is with them, and the music of sleigh-bells has been ringing out upon the air for some weeks now, and they expect to hear nothing else until late in the spring.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Dickey took dinner with Mr. and Mrs. Tinlson one day last week over in Willoughby.

The last Miscellany met with Miss Merkle. The afternoon was dark and gray, but plenty of music by Miss Giblin of Painesville and Miss Cleveland of Mentor, led to forgetfulness of weather, while the talk on "Lincoln" given by Miss Gullerson of Lake Erie College completed the delightful afternoon. Roll call was responded to by quotations from James Whitcomb Riley.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph McDonnell were recently married in Rochester, N. Y., and have come here to live we understand.

Miss Electa Pinney of Kirtland has been spending the past week over here with relatives.

Mr. Horatio Randall, until recently a resident of Kirtland, was killed by a train on the Nickle Plate R. R. on the night of the ninth, was buried from the home of his nephew, Mr. Guy Randall here in Mentor, and [illegible] poor body rests in our cemetery. Mr. Randall left a wife and one son. Nobody seems to know how the accident happened, and probably never will.

Miss Electa Dewey of Painesville has been a recent guest at the very hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Smith and family.

The Mentor hunters were all out with dog and gun on Saturday after the poor rabbit, good and hard.

Mr. and Mrs. M. P. Berry expect to leave here for Fargo, Fla., in a few weeks, or as soon as their new house down there in the sunny south is finished enough for them to go into.

Clyde Porter, a former Mentor boy but at present a resident of Ashtabula, was in our village last week hunting up some of his old friends.

The last heard from Mrs. LaVerne Amidon and others of the Alice Harrison party, they were "doing" the Grand Canyon in Arizona, and having the time of their lives.

Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Carver have recently been visiting friends in Toledo.

Miss Kate Garrett has been putting her Mentor property in fine shape for sale, or would rent (we understand) for twelve dollars per—to reliable parties. Miss Garrett is soon to return to her nephew in the west, for whom she is keeping house since the death of his wife more than a year ago.

The Queen Esther Circle are to pack a barrel with clothing, etc., for the use of the Deaconesses in Cleveland, some time next week, and anyone having anything to spare, might leave it with Mrs. Shaffner at the parsonage.

Mrs. Charles Justus spent a short time in the city last week with her daughter, Miss Carrie, who is in the public library there.

At the Missionary Tea which was held in the Methodist church on Thursday afternoon, there was a Thank Offering of something over twelve dollars received, which goes to pay for the support of four of the Home Missionaries which are being kept at work by the great M. E. church at different points. The next regular meeting in December is to be with Mrs. Cassius Harris, the program in charge of Mrs. T. D. Morley.

The ladies of the Disciple church held another of their most excellent food sales on Saturday at which they cleared something over twelve dollars besides getting their names up still higher for good cooking. These ladies are to hold their bazaar in the church building on the 4th of December but whether a supper will be given at that time or not has not yet been decided upon.

The funeral of Mr. Edmund Cadle was held from his home, Larwood, in West Mentor, on Wednesday afternoon, Rev. F. J. Dunbar of Lisbon in charge, assisted by our Mr. Schaffner. The pall bearers were their four sons who less than a year ago bore their mother to her last resting place. Mr. Cadle was seventy-six years of age and leaves three daughters and four sons all of whom are married and settled in homes of their own, and all but one, Mr. Carl Cadle (whose home is in Syracuse, N. Y.) are living in this state.

NEED OF A NEW HORIZON

Excessive Application to Any One Line of Endeavor is a Grave Mistake to Make.

Many excellent women, when the flush of youth has passed, instead of maturing into enduring, increasing usefulness and serenity, become like unto a house left desolate. Whether work be drudgery or delight, too exclusive application to it naturally tends to narrow the horizon. The merchant finds himself surrounded by dry goods talk, and dry goods people until the walls of his store are the boundaries of his world. The scientist who puts his soul and heart and brain into the pursuit of the beetle finds in time that every point of the compass ends in a beetle. The society woman who finds all her interest in one class and in one set of events and modes of living sees and feels little of the vast and palpitating current of human life above and below and around her. The nerves and brain and muscles grow weary of monotony. However intensely we apply ourselves we should keep our eyes on the distant hills and the crimson sunset. There should always be kept open a path that runs away to the west or east or north or south, to an entirely new horizon, to some other work one loves, to some other study that appeals, to a new game with a new set of rules.—Collier's.

Causes of Tempests.

Science attributes tempests to a general internal movement of detached masses of aerial projectiles which traverse the general mass of the atmosphere like the discharge from a mitrailleuse. Even in time of calm the movements of the air may be complex. During periods of excessive heat puffs of air hot as from a furnace strike the exposed portions of the human body. The air mass at a normal temperature holds heat as the organism holds the cell. Such phenomena as the projectiles of heat are frequently produced several times within the period of a few minutes. The elastic condition of the air is not at all like the surrounding atmospherical strata. The heated air is sent out in projectilelike pulsations. The pulsations are produced not in high regions alone.

Declare War on Colds

A crusade of education which aims that common colds may become uncommon within the next generation has been begun by prominent New York physicians. Here is a list of the "don'ts" which the doctors say will prevent the annual visitation of the cold:

"Don't sit in a draughty car.
Don't sleep in hot rooms.
Don't avoid the fresh air.

To which we would add: when you take a cold get rid of it as quickly as possible. To accomplish that you will find Chamberlain's Cough Remedy most excellent. Sold by all dealers.

SYNOPSIS.

Harding Kent calls on Louise Farrish to propose marriage and finds the house in great excitement over the attempted suicide of her sister Katharine. Kent starts an investigation and finds that Hugh Crandall, suitor for Katharine, who had been forbidden the house by General Farrish, had talked with Katharine over the telephone just before she shot herself. A torn piece of yellow paper is found, at sight of which General Farrish is stricken with paralysis. Kent discovers that Crandall has left town hurriedly. Andrew Elser, an aged banker, commits suicide about the same time as Katharine attempted her life. A yellow envelope is found in Elser's room. Post Office Inspector Davis, Kent's friend, takes up the case. Kent is convinced that Crandall is at the bottom of the mystery. Katharine's strange outcry puzzles the detectives. Kent and Davis search Crandall's room and find an address, Lock Box 17, Ardway, N. J. Kent goes to Ardway to investigate and becomes suspicious of a "Henry Cook." A woman commits suicide at the Ardway Hotel. A yellow letter also figures in this case. Kent calls Louise on the long distance telephone and finds that she had just been called by Crandall from the same booth. "Cook" disappears. The Ardway postmaster is missing. Inspector Davis arrives at Ardway and takes up the investigation. He discovers that the dead woman is Sarah Sacket of Bridgeport. Louise telephones Kent imploring him to drop the investigation. Kent returns to New York to get an explanation from Louise. He finds the body of a woman in Central Park and more yellow letters. He sees Crandall, whom he recognizes as "Cook," enter the Farrish home. Louise again implores Kent to drop the investigation and refuses to give any explanation. Later Kent sees Crandall and Louise in an automobile. Kent returns to Ardway.

CHAPTER XI—(Continued)

"Let me see," she continued. "It was a week ago Tuesday—no, it was Wednesday, for I went over to my sister's Tuesday and Mr. Rouser left word for me, and I found it waiting for me when I came back. He asked me to come over and take the office for the day. I was surprised when I come over here to open up to find him here, for I'd understood that he was going to be gone all day. He explained that he didn't have to go till after the mail was in and he stayed here and helped me sort. There was a lot of mail that day; people round here are great for answering advertisements and getting circulars. Besides that, some of them get-rich-quick concerns have got hold of our telephone subscribers' book and there's always a lot of mining stock letters. There was no less than four good-sized bundles of letters from New York. Rouser was sorting the letters and I was handling the second class and the papers. I got through with that and picked up the last bundle of letters. In it was no less than six letters addressed to Lock Box 17. 'Seventeen's rented at last,' says I, thinking it funny that I didn't know the name on them, Henry Malcolm Stewart. 'Who's got it?' 'I'll take charge of them,' says he, taking the letters right out of my hand before I had a chance to look at the postmarks or anything. I noticed, too, that he didn't put them in the box but jammed them into his pocket along with a lot of other letters he had. I couldn't say who the other letters was addressed to, for I didn't get a chance to see them. They might have been his own, for all I know. But I couldn't help thinking that the only reason he'd waited till the mail was distributed was to get hold of them Lock Box 17 letters. As soon as he got them he went away, and he didn't come back till after closing time."

"Have you any idea where he went?"

"When I come over here that day I supposed he was going to the city, but a few minutes after he left the office I saw him driving past in one of the livery rigs."

"Which direction did he go?" I asked, feeling more and more sure that I had struck the right trail. In all probability this young fellow in the post-office was merely an innocent tool of Crandall. He had driven off somewhere to meet Crandall and give him the Lock Box 17 letters, for I was convinced that Stewart was merely an alias of the villain who had been sending out the yellow letters. If I could learn where the postmaster had gone on this visit, I might be able to find him now.

"Every time Charlie Rouser goes driving," said Miss Cox, "he always goes that way," indicating the opposite direction from the station. "I shouldn't be surprised in the least if he was keeping company with some farmer's daughter."

A sudden light came into her eyes and a smile of satisfaction spread over her face.

"Land alive, I never thought of it before," she exclaimed, "but I'd bet anything he's gone off to get married."

"Hardly likely," said I. "He wouldn't go off and leave the office unguarded without telling any one. And he wouldn't leave five thousand dollars lying there in the drawer."

"That's just what he would do. I'll bet he had a windfall of some sort and the minute he got the money in his hands he just couldn't wait to go and tell the girl."

"Somebody would have known it if he got a horse at the livery stable, would they not?"

"Oh, that's neither here nor there. He might have gone on his bicycle. He generally keeps it over there in the corner, and it ain't there now."

"It might be up at his boarding-house."

"It might be," said Miss Cox.

It came to me that if Davis had thought it worth while to go to the Widow Smith's to make inquiries, it might be worth my while, too. After asking Miss Cox for directions, I told her I was going to see if Rouser's wheel was missing, and made my way up one of the side streets to the boarding-house. Davis' visit evidently had ruffled the widow. I found her in anything but a communicative mood.

"If you're another of those detective men coming prying around here," she said, "you might just as well get out. I've said all I'm going to say, and that's all there is to it."

"Please don't mistake me for a detective," I said as pleasantly as I could. "I'm—a—friend of Miss Cox down to the post office and we were wondering whether Charlie had taken his bicycle when he went away, and Miss Cox thought you might know."

"If you're a friend of Jennie Cox," said Mrs. Smith, "I guess I'd be likely to know it, being her own cousin and knowing as well as I know my own face that she hasn't had a man friend for eleven years, since Aleck Thompson died. As for Charlie Rouser going away on his bicycle, I don't know nothing about it. All I know is his wheel ain't here, but he never kept it here anyway. He always kept it down to the post-office."

With that she slammed the door in my face, but I went away well satisfied. As I walked down the dusty path of the so-called street toward the hotel I reviewed all I had learned and was delighted to think how amazed Davis would be when I presented my facts gathered in the last twenty-four hours, which were these:

Hugh Crandall was aware that we were on his trail.

Unable to learn anything from Louise over the telephone, he had dared to go to the Farrish home.

He had so intimidated Louise that she had asked me to withdraw at once from the inquiry.

Acting on her fears, he had persuaded her to accompany him to some place in New Jersey.

Lock Box 17 was used for the mail of some one who had taken the alias of Henry Malcolm Stewart.

All the mail that came to that address was taken care of by Charlie Rouser, the postmaster.

Rouser was in the habit of going at frequent intervals either on his bicycle or in a buggy out on the road that led away from the station.

Rouser, when he disappeared, undoubtedly had gone away on his bicycle.

Everything, to my mind, pointed to his having gone to meet Crandall.

How to account for the fact that Rouser had not returned was still a poser to me, but as I reviewed Crandall's connection with the chain of persons who had been driven to death I found myself believing that it was not at all out of the range of possibility for Crandall to have made away with Rouser for fear of betrayal. From all I had learned about the missing postmaster, I was convinced that he was weak rather than vicious, and I felt that he probably was an innocent party to the nefarious plot of the yellow letters. Davis' story that it was a crime of two persons, after all, was only a theory. When the mystery was cleared up I was positive that the only criminal who would be uncovered would be Hugh Crandall. I shuddered as I recalled that Louise even now was somewhere with him, not exactly alone, to be sure, for the car was driven by her chauffeur, but still it was a most disconcerting thought.

As I approached the hotel I saw a buggy stop before it, the occupants of which were Davis and the constable. As Davis dismounted I heard him say to the constable:

"Tonight at eight."

"I'll be on hand, you bet," said the constable as he drove off.

I quickened my steps and overtook Davis just as he started up the stairs to his room.

"I've got some great news for you," I whispered and went on up with him.

The minute he got into the room he flung himself on the bed, as if utterly worn out, and lighted a cigarette. I had expected that he would be eager to question me, but this did not seem to be the case. He lay there with eyes half closed as if unaware of my presence.

Annoyed as I was at his seeming indifference, I was sure that when I told him my amazing news about Crandall and my discoveries about the postmaster he would be effectually aroused. I took it for granted that his mood was due to despondency over his failure to find either of them.

"I have seen Hugh Crandall twice, no, three times, today," I said by way of beginning, "and I have found out how Rouser went when he left the post office."

"Yes," he said absent-mindedly.

"What's more," I cried impatiently, "I know who had Lock Box No. 17. I know what was done with the mail that came to that address."

Davis, without answering me, reached for another cigarette, lighting it from the butt he had been smoking. His nonchalant indifference grated on my nerves and I lost my temper.

"Confound it, Kent," he said with considerable asperity, "I was so busy thinking out something I really didn't hear what you said. Sit down and tell me all about it."

Mollified by his apology, I sat down on the foot of the bed and told him the story of my day, how I had seen a man going into the Farrish home and had recognized him later as Hugh Crandall, or at least as the man who had registered at the hotel as Cook; how I had been barred from the house; how I had discovered another yellow-letter suicide in the park; how, when I returned to the Farrish home after Crandall had left, Louise had told me of the theft of the scrap of yellow paper from her desk; how she had left me to go off in her automobile after insisting that I drop the investigating; how I had seen her again, crossing the ferry with Crandall in the machine; how I had returned to Ardway and had learned that Lock Box 17 was held in the name of Henry Malcolm Stewart; how the missing postmaster himself had been in the habit of putting the mail that came to that address into his own pocket and going off with it, and finally, how Miss Cox and I had determined that when he disappeared he had gone off on his bicycle.

"From all I have learned," I said in conclusion, "I am convinced that Rouser was the tool—in all probability the innocent tool—of Hugh Crandall in carrying out his nefarious schemes. Crandall apparently had him take the Lock Box 17 mail to some agreed meeting place. It would not surprise me in the least if Crandall, finding himself in danger of exposure, had made away with the postmaster. I am convinced that Crandall is aware that he is being watched. In his desperation he had the hardihood to visit the Farrish home and to abstract that fragment of the yellow letter, lest it should be used as evidence against him. I am convinced, too, that he has succeeded in terrorizing Louise by the same methods that he used with her sister, so that she is trying to dissuade me from pursuing Crandall. Rouser, when he left the post office, went away on his wheel on the road that leads from the station. If you follow that road with me, perhaps we can find him. Pretty good for one day's work, don't you think?"

"Not bad," said Davis, "if only you would not persist in mistaking your own deductions for facts, but you overlooked the most important fact."

"What do you mean?"

"You didn't happen to find out from Miss Cox or from the Widow Smith, did you, whether or not the missing postmaster was left-handed?"

"What's that got to do with it?" I cried, convinced that as usual he was amusing himself at my expense.

"Much more than you think," he answered gravely. "It was the knowledge that the criminal must, or at least one of the pair, must have been a left-handed man that gave me one of the most important clues in this case."

"Confound you and your clues!" I exclaimed. "Where have they led you? What more do you know about this chain of crime than when we started?"

He listened unruffled to my tirade and as I finished remarked calmly:

"I only know this much. Constable Dodds and I are going out at eight o'clock tonight to arrest the missing postmaster and his accomplice. I know where they both are, or where they will be tonight. You may come with us if you wish. And now I am going to get a couple of hours sleep. I expect we will have a rather busy night of it."

As he concluded his amazing statement he rolled over on his side and closed his eyes, and in a few seconds was apparently fast asleep.

CHAPTER XII.

The Ride in the Dark

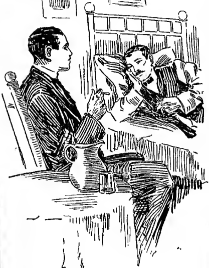
Not since my early boyhood has the terrible fear of darkness come over me as it did that night at eight as the three of us set out from Ardway. The mystery of the journey, too, added to its terrors. I had not seen Davis after his startling announcement of his nocturnal mission until he came into the hotel dining room for supper. All through the meal he had laughed and chatted on all sorts of immaterial subjects, influenced undoubtedly by the fact that there were several others seated at the table with us. There had been no opportunity for private conversation between us before we left the hotel together a little before eight for a side street where Dodds, the constable, was waiting for us with a vehicle.



The Minute He Got Into the Room He Flung Himself on the Bed

We had lingered at the table until all the others had left. Just as we got up, Davis turned to me and in a hardly perceptible tone asked:

"Have you got that revolver I gave you?"

"It's up stairs," I answered, in the same undertone. "Do you want it?"

"No," he said significantly, touching his hip pocket, "but you may."

I hastened up-stairs to get the weapon and when I returned he was waiting for me at the door and hurried me around the corner and into the buck-board. With Dodds crowded in between us we drove along the street leading away from the station and soon struck what is locally known as the Plank Road, skirting a chain of hills which the residents dignify by the name of mountains. So precipitous and rocky are these that little effort had been made to cultivate them and the habitations are few and far between. There seemed to be practically no travel at night. We encountered only one vehicle of any sort, and that was about two miles out from Ardway, when we heard an automobile in the distance behind us.

"Turn out," whispered Davis to Dodds, "and stop until it has passed us."

The constable drew in under the shade of some trees. It was pitch dark, the only light coming from an ancient lantern hung over the dashboard. As the automobile came nearer Davis unhooked the lantern and holding it down between his legs shielded it with the folds of a long raincoat he was wearing. The automobile dashed by us, apparently unaware of our presence.

"All right," said Davis as soon as it had vanished in the distance, "go on."

Dodds drove on in silence for perhaps two miles farther. "We passed a little stone cottage nestling in a clearing under the hill.

"Yep," said the constable, "Miller's Lane, they call it."

Though to my city eyes there was no sign of a road, Dodds, about three hundred yards beyond the cottage, pulled the horse sharply to the right and we began ascending a rocky lane that led almost straight up the hill.

The First Cable.

The laying down of the first intercontinental cable was begun in 1857. The vessels, two American and two British, laid 300 miles of the cable when it snapped and the attempt was put off until 1858. In August of that year the junction between the two continents was completed by the laying down of 2,050 miles of cable from Valentia, Ireland, to Newfoundland. The engineer was Sir Charles Bright, who was knighted for his success. The first two messages were sent on August 5, and were from the queen of England to the president of the United States and his reply. But after sending 271 messages the cable proved a failure and a perfect one was not secured until 1866.

His Sympathies With Elk

A curious story of adventure comes from Montana. While a freight train was lying over at a small mountain station, the engineer borrowed a shotgun and started out for a short hunt. Finding nothing, he was returning to the train when a cow came running at him, and before he realized his danger, she tossed him in the air.

Getting to his feet as quickly as possible, he dodged behind a tree, and then, to his dismay, found that the gun barrel was bent so as to be useless. The next ten minutes were very lively ones, while the cow chased the engineer round and round the tree. Just when he was about to succumb from fatigue, an angry snort was heard, and a big elk appeared upon the scene, head down and prepared for a fight.

So was the cow, and in another moment the two animals dashed at each other. The engineer watched the combat for a few minutes, until prudence suggested that he should make a retreat as soon as he could. He regained the train in safety, and never knew the outcome of the battle, but he hopes the elk was the victor.

NOT SO MUCH CHANGE

EXPERIENCES OF TWO WOMEN WHEN THEY MOVED.

Each Found They Had Done a Whole Lot of Unnecessary Worrying as to How Their Furniture Was Going to Look.

"I moved in the summer," remarked a Brooklyn woman. "I didn't move very far, but it makes a great difference. I moved from the rather cramped and semi-dark first floor of our apartment up to the top floor, flooded with sunlight and swimming in fresh air. Now, just before I moved one of my best friends came to see me—a woman with whom I'm so intimate that she and I never hesitate to say to one another exactly what we think. 'I suppose you're going to buy a lot of new furniture. When you get these old things of yours up into that sunshine above there and spread out into so much more space you will see how shabby and inadequate it all is and you'll have to replace it.'

"Now, I was rather fond of my old furniture and I didn't at all relish the idea of losing it or of spending money for new.

"I moved. Then another intimate friend called to see me. She looked around at all my things with their very souls visible in the bright new light and all spread out conspicuously as they never had had to be down below in the smaller apartment. As I waited for more criticism she turned to me beamingly and said: 'How fine your furniture looks up here. It has a chance to be shown right. I never realized how well it looked down in that little apartment where you didn't have room to display it and where it was too dim to let any one appreciate it. It makes all the difference in the world to bring it out into the good sunshine.'

"Isn't that delicious?"

"It is," answered one of her hearers. "I had an experience similar to it earlier in the year and I think women who contemplate moving to larger quarters and dread the expense of a lot of new furniture should know of it. We moved from a tiny, narrow, ugly house in a row to a big detached house. In the old place the furniture looked shabby and inartistic and we were always dissatisfied, though we knew it had cost a good deal in the beginning. It had to be put in stiff rows because there would have been no room for us to walk around otherwise. The cumbersome pieces we had brought from the big house we had originally lived in looked hideous. The place we were moving to looked so much larger that everyone said we should have to buy quantities of things to fill it. My husband even wanted to sell most of our old 'truck' as he called it, and start in brand new, but I convinced him that we could not possibly afford that, so we furbished things up as well as possible, closed our eyes as they were removed and then set about fixing the new house.

"The first thing we discovered was that we had enough. There were things for every room. I reveled in spreading out, for a change, and found I could make the stiff-looking old fashioned articles take on new airs of attraction and fit comfortably into big, irregular rooms where they had stuck out resentfully in ugly rows of straightness before. I am not raving about my home, for I know it has many defects and if I had plenty of money I should make many improvements, but I do know that in my new big sunny rooms everything we formerly half despised looks far better than ever it did before. And positively all we have had to buy has been a couple of chairs that we had been intending to get for a year past, and a few rugs to replace our heavy old carpets—which I refused to put down."

GIVE AIR OF DISTINCTION

That the Braided Waistcoat Is to Remain Will Be Welcome Intelligence.

Braided waistcoats are in again and long may they remain in favor, for better than any other accessory they dress up and give distinction to a plain tailor-made suit or to a simply made silk frock. The model which made the hit belongs to one of the first of the Eton jacket costumes, and any clever woman can duplicate it, for the waistcoat is merely a sleeveless bodice of white silk, fastening in the back, its neck slightly rounded out and its front elongated into a squared-off little tab extending half way to the base of the hips. Double rows of narrow colored silk soutache running straight across the front of the waistcoat form stripes which are filled in with other rows of the braid set on in scallop or pointed effect. The new waistcoat must always be bolted from below the arms across the front.

Kneeling Cushions.

Among the gifts showered upon recent brides, kneeling cushions have been observed. They are made with the express purpose of being used by the bride at her wedding. She is to kneel upon a soft cushion while the ceremony takes place.

In a recent case the bride's initials were embroidered upon a white satin background, and at the corners of the cushion there were short but very large gold tassels.

There was another case noticed recently of a kneeling cushion embroidered with white flowers. The bride's first name was a floral one, and the allusion was therefore very tender and appropriate.

The only drawback to the cushion is that it is rather in the way sometimes.

Selection of Hangings.

In selecting draperies and hangings avoid large figured materials. Light walls and hangings will make the small room seem large. A pillow or two and a rug of a deeper hue than the tints of the predominating color of the characterless room will brighten such a room into a thing of beauty.

Social Forms and Entertainments

How to Raise Money.

Our Sunday school class, consisting of eight girls about 15 years of age, wish to donate some money to our new church. Please suggest to us how we could raise this money.—Maple Leaf.

There are many ways to make money. Not knowing the circumstances in your case, it is hard to suggest. I attended a very clever "experience" meeting, where each girl had made a dollar by her own efforts during the summer vacation. Of course, the dollar limit was not obligatory, but all had to make 100 cents.

One girl made currant jelly and sold it to her friends at so much a glass; another pressed her brother's trousers; one stopped buying ice cream soda, and one saved carfare.

You might have one or two sales on Saturday afternoon for housewives, having all sorts of home-cooked delicacies. I am sure with eight clever girls the new church will receive a liberal donation.

A Difficult Question.

Your advice has helped more than one girl, so I come to you for the first time, hoping to be helped also. I have been engaged to a young man for a year, but we do not feel able to marry now and probably will not for two or three years. What we want to know is, is it right for us to still be engaged, knowing this? We have talked of breaking the engagement, but as yet we have not, not knowing which is best to do. I do not believe in long engagements. We are both anxious to do the right thing, whatever that is.—Unhappy.

Now don't be unhappy about the situation, but just agree this way: break the engagement with the full consent of you both, then when the time comes that circumstances will permit the marriage, why do it. You are perfectly right about long engagements. They are not fair. You should both feel perfectly free; some one else may come into both your lives, you cannot tell.

A Wedding Supper.

We are about to give a wedding luncheon, and cannot decide what to serve that would be dainty and yet elaborate. The supper or luncheon is to be served at 8 p. m., and we would like to have courses and desire you to arrange the menu. We want as elaborate an affair as you think would be in keeping. One thing that I had better mention that may assist you in arranging the menu is that we wish to serve cold turkey for the meat.—Mother.

At that hour you should serve a supper, not a luncheon, which is a middle of the day function. Serve cold turkey, escalloped oysters, hot rolls, olives, celery, cranberry jelly, then a fruit salad, cheese straws, ice cream in individual forms, coffee and the wedding cake.

To Entertain Informally.

Can you suggest some way of entertaining a party of young people between the ages of 20 and 30, very informally? There will be about 12 in the party. Also what would you suggest for simple refreshments, and prizes, if they be awarded?—X. C. L.

Did you ever hear of a really new method of entertaining? Nearly every novelty is only something old done in a new way. I think cards are the best in most cases, with perhaps a little contest at the end while the hostess sees to refreshments. The other day I saw a jolly hour spent in guessing what flowers each guest represented by wearing some article to indicate the blossom. The rose, peony, violet, tiger lily, pansy, etc., were there.

Entertainment for a Bride-Elect.

In a few days I am going to entertain 12 young ladies in honor of a bride to be, and will ask you to kindly suggest some form of entertainment, preferably a guessing contest.—A. B. L.

At a pretty entertainment given for a bride-elect the guests were passed pink heart-shaped cards bearing words transposed, apparently a hopeless mixture. The hostess explained that when properly spelled the words represented the articles in the trousseau of a bride. There were two prizes offered. The refreshments were heart-shaped sandwiches, coffee served in the drawing room, heart peppermints and delicious pink ice cream in heart forms.

Not Necessary to Reply.

Should a wedding announcement be answered?—F. D.

A wedding announcement with no "at home" enclosure does not require an answer, but if either of the couple are intimate friends it would be courteous to write a note of good wishes and congratulations. People are always pleased to be remembered.

The Proper Thing to Do.

Kindly tell me the proper way of eating a club sandwich in a restaurant, also whether bouillon is sipped from the cup or eaten with a spoon.—Country Girl.

A club sandwich is eaten with a fork, the toast, if very dry, may be broken and eaten with the fingers. Bouillon is taken from a spoon except the last few swallows which may be taken from the cup by lifting with one of the handles and raising the cup to the lips.

Her Name Was Not Polly Ticks.

During the late campaign an Illinois candidate for the legislature was driving through the country, seeking votes among the farmers, when he met a young man in farmer's garb, walking by the roadside.

Having in mind a prospective vote, he stopped his horse and saluted him in a familiar manner, inquiring:

"Are you paying any attention to politics nowadays?"

The young man stopped, looked at him suspiciously, and drawled out:

"No, stranger; that don't happen to be my gal's name; but ef it was, I wouldn't think it was any of your durned business."

This ended the interview as well as the prospect.

CALLS PACKEY M'FARLAND RING WIZARD

Packy McFarland, Stock Yards Lightweight

Packy McFarland of Chicago, known throughout the pugilistic world as the "stockyards champion," because of his being the idol of that section of the western city, is rated by boxing experts as the "wizard of the ring," says the Philadelphia Public Ledger. McFarland is a fistic marvel. Now at the age of 24 years, he is accumulating a fortune rapidly and has set his plans to make $100,000 in the next year. This is to be done by a combination of his brains and hands.

McFarland has gone about his ring contests the same as a contractor assumes a contract. If the task can be completed in three days the brainy contractor realizes that it is folly to waste six, and submit his machinery to unnecessary wear. It is the same with McFarland. If he sees that a bout can be ended in three rounds he rarely fights ten, but if in trying to end the bout quickly and decisively he feels he is endangering his tools, which are his hands, why he simply wins by the scientific route.

It is that element of uncertainty which has made McFarland the magnet to attract ring goers. His science at times is bewildering and ardent followers of the game are oft-times at a loss to follow his plan of attack and defense.

McFarland has been boxing eight years, has fought more than 100 battles, ranging from one round to twenty-five, and in that time has never taken the count. He started his career by knocking his opponents out in short order, winning his first six contests in that decisive fashion, all being won inside of six rounds. He continued his knockout record in the second, third and fourth year of his ring career, winning 27 out of 37 contests in that decisive fashion.

It then began to dawn on McFarland that a skilled mechanic would be at loss without his tools, and he realized that he must nurse his hands, not slug and try to knock a man's head off with each punch, but deliver his blows scientifically, block those of the slugger and avoid punishment. Like all men who have studied real boxing, he soon discovered that it was far more pleasant to give than receive.

From that day McFarland has truly been the wizard of the ring. He is proud of his defense and only during the last year, when a New York slugger reached him and blacked one of his eyes, McFarland was so ashamed of the discoloration that he passed up a $1,000 six-round engagement. No man had ever blacked his eye before, and it is said he remained indoors, away from his friends, until the discoloration had disappeared.

SNODGRASS HOLDS HIS JOB

Will Not Be Fired for Muffing Fly in Recent World's Series—Error Excusable, Says McGraw.

Persistent reports that the New York Giants would dispense with the services of Fred Snodgrass as a result of his costly error in the last world series game are set at rest in a statement given out by John J. McGraw, manager. He says:

"I do not blame Fred Snodgrass in the least for his failure to catch that fly ball in the lost game of the world series at Boston. Snodgrass is a valuable and conscientious player, and he will be a member of the Giants next season. His failure to make the catch is something that would happen but once in a thousand cases and I want to say that he is deserving of sympathy for this failure. It hurts him more keenly than it hurts anyone else.

Fred Snodgrass.

"In this connection I may say that I feel even worse for Mathewson than for Snodgrass, as Matty pitched three excellent games without winning any of them. There never was and never will be another pitcher like Matty."

Kraenzlein to Go Abroad.

Alvin Kraenzlein, former coach of the University of Michigan track team, who is one of the greatest all-round athletes ever developed in America, will spend two years abroad. It is possible he may sign to coach some of the European athletes in preparation for the 1916 Olympic games in Berlin.

NOTES OF SPORTDOM

Germany Schaefer has received an offer of a job managing an athletic park at Detroit.

Bob Harmon of St. Louis said the Pirate squad was the best in either league this season.

Eastern writers seem to think Evers is anxious to get rid of Tinker. Johnny doesn't talk that way.

Joe Kelly of the Toronto International league team will take his team to Macon, Ga., to train next spring.

When the football regulars are humped hard the scrubs begin to move about as though they were being overlooked.

Topsy Hartsel's admirers at Philadelphia gave him a dinner when he returned home after a successful season at Toledo.

Joy riding and attacks on the wine crop are to be dismissed on the Athletics' team next season. So says Connie Mack.

Jake Stahl, chaperon of the blushing world's title holders, favors letting the players in on the picture money of post season series.

Several clubs in the Pacific Coast league are after Frank Chance. They should be commended for wanting to improve themselves.

Fans of New Orleans are going to have much boxing in a short time. Another new club is to be started. It will be known as the New Royal Athletic club.

Zbyszko, the Polish wrestler, is after Frank Gotch again. His manager, Jack Herrmann, says the Salt Lake Amusement company is ready to post $5,000 for a bout between the two heavies.

New York's Bowling League.

The Eastern Bowling league, run by alley keepers of New York and vicinity, will be made up of eight cities this season—New York, Brooklyn, Trenton, N. J., Newark, Paterson, Jersey City, Union Hill and Hoboken. The best bowlers of each city will roll in the individual and five-team games,—the most victorious out of five games in each series winning the championship.

Krug Wants Regular Job.

Marty Krug, the utility infielder of the Red Sox, will probably be seen at short next season in the regular line-up. Krug says it is too hard a task for him to beat out Heinie Wagner this year, but he will do his best and try to get in the regular line-up the coming season.

HEROIC EFFORT TO EXTERMINATE DREAD BROWNTAIL AND GYPSY MOTH IN THE EAST

One of the Most Successful Devices Yet Used Is the Hannigan "Moth-Pot"—Electric Company Makes Experiments With Arc Lamp Especially Arranged.

Although the work has not attracted a great deal of attention outside of New England, it is nevertheless a fact that the United States department of agriculture has been expending about $100,000 annually in New Hampshire in an heroic effort to exterminate the dread browntail and gypsy moth pests. In addition, the legislatures of New Hampshire and Massachusetts have set aside smaller sums to help on the work. Both pests continue to advance over an everwidening area, so that it will not be long before other states which now neglect the opportunity of warding off trouble will find themselves engaged in the same battle.

The widest variety of devices for killing off the pests have been put into service. One of the most successful of these was the so-called Hannigan "moth pot," which consisted in the essence of a flaring pot and a quantity of burning crude oil. At first these were set upon the ground in commons and other open places but later they were hung from the mast arms of street lamps, the best location being found to be about three feet back from the arc lamp, measured along the mast arm, and three feet below. Even at this distance, however, the heavy black smoke from the smudge soiled the arm and was in several ways disagreeable.

The Manchester Traction, Light and Power company had meanwhile been experimenting with an arc lamp arrangement to accomplish the same ends as the moth pots and the accompanying drawing shows the type of globe which was finally adopted after considerable experimenting. It is used on 72 volts, 7½ ampere, series alternating arc lamps, fitted with clear glass inner globes. From the drawing the glass workers manufactured a mold and from this 605 of the special globes were cast. By the terms of the contract, the electric light company was to cart these globes to the lamps, put them on, take away and store the regular globes, empty the globes daily, keep track of the quantity caught and at the end of the moths' flight, replace the old globes and store the special globes until the next year.

Arc Lamp Bowl Used in Electrocuting Moths

The globes were put on with the cut away part up so that the moths fluttering around the light would fall into the bowl. The first gathering was made July 8. The flight, which usually continues about eight days, this year lasted 15 days. Between July 8 and July 23, there were collected from the globes 107 5-16 bushels within the city and 12 7-16 bushels from the globes placed at two of the summer resorts.

Two different quarts were counted, one moth at a time, and it was found that there were just about 1,600 moths to a quart. Of these about two-thirds were females. This fact could easily be determined from the moths as taken from the globes, but careful observations were made of those which thickly encrusted the street lamp poles, trees, sides of buildings, etc., and gave good evidence that this percentage was accurate enough for all purposes. In a bushel there were, of course, 51,200 moths according to these figures, or 5,494,500 in all. If 60 per cent were females, the figure would be 3,296,640. In a year the development resulting from the eggs deposited by each female would be about 400, so that if the quantity mentioned had not been destroyed in the electric light globes, they would have produced in excess of 1,318,656,000 other moths to get busy on the trees in 1913. Adding to this figure the number that would be developed by the females captured at the two summer resorts, Lake Massabesic and Pine Island Park, the total of 1,474,560,000 is reached, a truly astounding figure.

In collecting the moths from the globes the lamp trimmer simply placed his hand over the opening at the bottom, removed the globe and dumped the contents after measurement into two-bushel bags of close woven goods. Measuring was done by means of a ten-quart flaring pail suitably marked on the sides. The condition of the employes who attended to this job was shocking, as they were covered with rash from their toes to the top of their heads. Some of them found it necessary to bathe in creoline or strong yellow soap baths five or six times a day.

When thrown loosely in, such a globe as that shown would hold about 10½ quarts of moths. However, after a globe got about half filled the moths seemed to stew from the heat of the lamp, so that about half way through the heap would be wet and at the bottom "muddy." Several of the inner globes gave way under the confinement of the heat and were badly distorted and discolored. Sometimes the globes would be so full that the moths would be heaped up and on most of the heavy catch days they were almost full to the brim. From the globes the moths were taken to one of the generating stations, where they were thrown into the furnaces and burned.

The theory upon which the device works is that the globes shall be cut off at such a height that the moths can easily fly inside but be unable conveniently to fly out. The shape shown was found to be best when used with the regulation type of obtuse angled reflectors. Examination of the moths when taken from the globes showed them not to be badly burned, except occasionally on the head. Death seemed to have resulted from general suffocation from the intense heat or from impact against the walls of the death chamber.

The mold is now at the glass factory and any public service corporation or municipality can obtain the special globes at the same price as the regular type, as the mold has been placed on file.

TIMBER SUPPLY OF THE UNITED STATES

(By R. S. KELLOGG.)

Most of the forests in the United States are privately owned. Approximately 20 per cent of the standing timber in the country is held by the federal government in national forests, Indian reservations, national parks and on the unreserved public domain, and by the states in the state reserves or other state lands. These public forests contain more than 100,000,000 acres of saw timber.

The estimated total amount of standing saw timber controlled by the federal government is 418,860,595 M board feet. The most of this timber is, of course, in national forests. In addition to the above amount there are perhaps seventy-five billion feet held by the states either in reserves or upon lands of various classes.

The private forests are of two distinct classes: (1) farmers' woodlots and (2) large holdings, either individual or corporate. The farmers' woodlots are chiefly scattered and detached remnants of the original forests, which as a rule have been severely culled. They are mainly in the eastern half of the United States and cover some two hundred million acres with a stand of perhaps three hundred billion board feet of saw timber and one and one-half billion cords of wood. Aside from their protective and ornamental value they furnish much firewood, many posts, poles and cross-ties, and some lumber and cooperage stock.

The larger private holdings contain about seventeen hundred billion feet. These holdings generally include the best timber in the regions in which they occur, since private capital always seeks the best possible investment. They are the principal sources of the lumber which is used today, and upon the manner in which they are managed depends in a large degree the timber supply of the future.

So far, true forestry has been practiced to only a slight extent, or not at all, upon the forests in private hands, and, because of lack of funds, it has not yet been possible to apply right methods of forest management to all public forests, though such methods will eventually be used in handling them. The map given herewith shows the forest lands of the government.

Water for Lambs.

Water for the lambs is of more importance than is sometimes thought. When the dews are heavy, as they are liable to be in late fall, the lambs may not drink much water, but that is not an indication that they do not need some. What they need they need badly, and no animal is so choice of the water it drinks as the sheep. Water is as important to the growth of any animal as food, and it is so cheap that it is short-sighted not to supply plenty of it fresh. It is important, too, to see that the lambs find it.

Ram for Sheep Breeding.

In buying a ram for mutton lambs his size alone is not the only thing to be considered. He must have all the other good qualities and even if he is a little under size it will do no harm.

Always keep the very best ewes in the flock for breeding. If you persist in selling the best you will soon sell the flock out from under you.

MADE A CLEAN JOB OF IT

First Time Old Gentleman Had Eaten a Crab, and He Left Nothing on the Dish.

A jolly old boy from the Midlands entered into one of the hotels at the seaside, and, seeing on the slab on the right a crab dressed on the shell with legs, claws and parsley ranged round, said to the landlord:

"What d'ye call that?"

"Crab," was the answer.

"Looks good. I'll have 'un; and gie us a pint o' ale."

Bread and butter was added and the diner left to his dinner. In about an hour the genial landlord entered the dining room to see if his guest was getting on all right. He found him chewing up the last claw, the chewer red in the face, but beaming.

"Like the crab, sir?"

"Yes; he was capital. I never tasted one afore. But I think you baked 'un a little too long; the crust was hard. Let's have another pint."

He had eaten the lot—shell, claws all complete.—London Tit-Bits.

RASH SPREAD TO ARMS

752 Roach Ave., Indianapolis, Ind.—"At first I noticed small eruptions on my face. The trouble began as a rash. It looked like red pimples. In a few days they spread to my arms and back. They itched and burned so badly that I scratched them and of course the result was blood and matter. The eruptions festered, broke, opened and dried up, leaving the skin dry and scaly. I spent many sleepless nights; my back, arms and face burning and itching; sleep was purely and simply out of the question. The trouble also caused disfigurement. My clothing irritated the breaking out.

"By this time I had used several well-known remedies without success. The trouble continued. Then I began to use the sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Within seven or eight days I noticed gratifying results. I purchased a full-sized cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment and in about eighteen or twenty days my cure was complete." (Signed) Miss Katherine McCallister, Apr. 12, 1912.

ROYALTY WELCOMES THE AMERICAN SETTLER

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS, THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, WELCOMES AMERICANS TO CANADA.

It was a happy speech, that on that beautiful October day, the Duke of Connaught, Governor-General of Canada, made at Macleod, Alberta. It was an opportune speech, heartful and resonant with good fellowship. And, as it was specially intended for American ears, the audience, comprised largely of so many American settlers in Canada, the time and place could not have been better chosen.

It was in reply to an address of welcome tendered to him at the pretty city of Macleod, with the foothills of the Rockies as a setting, and the great wheat fields between, and in fact all around the place as the foreground, that His Highness, true to the best interests of the country and to those of the Americans who choose to make Canada their home, said in part:

"I am well aware that among those whom I am now addressing, there are a very great proportion who were not born under the British flag. Most of these will have realized by now that residence under that flag implies no disabilities. All we ask is that the laws of Canada should be obeyed.

"With this provision every one is free to come and go, to marry, to live and to die as seems best to him, and as it pleases Providence.

"We bring no pressure to bear on anyone to adopt the Canadian nationality, for we do not value citizenship which is obtained under compulsion.

"Our American cousins are welcome from over the border. Thrice we welcome our Canadian and British brothers, who return to the Union Jack after living under the Stars and Stripes.

"History is repeating itself. For many years hundreds of young Britishers have sought fortune in the western States. Time has brought about a change, and the tide has set in the other direction, bringing across the frontier numbers of our neighbors to whom we are glad to return hospitalities.

"One of the chief dispensers of such hospitality in proportion to its population has, as we have said, changed its character from an important cattle town to a thriving wheat producing area.

"What it has lost from the picturesque point of view, it has gained in the material side, and I wish, in conclusion, to express the hope that the prosperity which has evinced itself here for the past ten years, may continue unabated in the future."

There is no reason why at a hundred places on this educative, instructive and interesting trip of His Royal Highness he might not have expressed himself in the same terms, and on each occasion, addressed large gatherings of Americans who are now settled on the prairies of Western Canada.—Advertisement.

Stretching It Some.

Two men were boasting about their rich kin. Said one: "My father has a big farm in Connecticut. It is so big that when he goes to the barn on Monday morning to milk the cows he kisses us all goodby, and he doesn't get back till the following Saturday."

"Why does it take him so long?" the other asked.

"Because the barn is so far away from the house."

"Well, that may be a pretty big farm, but compared to my father's farm in Pennsylvania your father's farm ain't no bigger than a city lot."

"Why, how big is your father's farm?"

"Well, it's so big that my father sends young married couples out to the barn to milk the cows, and the milk is brought back by their grandchildren."

Rochester, N. Y.—"I have a daughter 13 years old who has always been very healthy until recently, when she complained of dizziness and cramps every month, so bad that I would have to keep her home from school and put her to bed to get relief.

"After giving her only two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound she is now enjoying the best of health. I cannot praise your Compound too highly. I want every good mother to read what your medicine has done for my child."—Mrs. RICHARD N. DUNHAM, 311 Exchange St., Rochester, N.Y.

Stoutsville, Ohio.—"I suffered from headaches, backache and was very irregular. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and before I had taken the whole of two bottles I found relief. I am only sixteen years old, but I have better health than for two or three years. I cannot express my thanks for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I had taken other medicines but did not find relief."—Miss CORA B. ## MORE THAN SHE COULD BEAR

Heart of Gentle Old Maid Was Touched, and Silly Quarrel Immediately Came to an End.

Two old ladies who had been loving friends for many years had a violent quarrel, and it began to look as if the wound would never heal. Neither one felt like taking the initiative, and indeed both were too sore to care to make up Efforts of mutual friends were all in vain, representations to one that the other was suffering met only with the stubborn answer that she ought to suffer. They both insisted that they hoped the other would suffer more, and that she richly deserved it. Some thirteen months went by like this, and the one-time intimates saw each other only on state occasions, that is, at church each Sunday, where they sat side by side, too proud to change their pew because of what had happened But they never pretended to notice that the other was there On a recent Sabbath morning, however, Miss Sarah glanced around involuntarily at sound of a sneeze beside her, and despite her will kept her gaze fixed on Miss Malinda Then an awful revelation broke in on her mind. Melinda had come to church without a handkerchief! Miss Sarah did not know what the sufferings of a person about to be electrocuted might be, but she knew all about being at church without a handkerchief Malinda merited electrocution, in Miss Sarah's opinion but no crime was heinous enough to merit such agony as this A drop slowly gathered on Malinda's pinched nose, and finally fell off, giving place to another Miss Sarah could not bear it. She took out her own handkerchief surreptitiously, and it was a big one. Next moment there was a smothered sound of tearing cloth and Malinda felt something pressed into her right hand It was a half of the handkerchief, and it went to Malinda's eyes before it touched her needy nose. Then two wrinkled old hands groped for each other and through the sermon Miss Sarah and Miss Malinda sat and clung to the newly found friend who had been lost

Luxury of Balloon Travel.

A Zeppelin airship leaves the earth with none of the balloon's soaring motion It is just like a Pullman train, started without perceptible jar and kept in motion upon a perfect road bed, perfect track and perfect wheels At luncheon time individual tables are placed in position, and luncheon is served much as it is in the ordinary buffet dining car in America. There is soup, an entree, a toast—all piping hot—vegetables, salad, cheese and coffee. More of a dinner than luncheon and all served as though the chef and waiters had the conveniences of a great hotel at their command. The principles of the fireless cooker have been brought into service in preparing the food, the exhaust from the engines being made to supply heat.

The comforts are all those of a very modern hotel The cabin is kept at an unvarying comfortable temperature by means of pipes that carry the exhaust heat from the engines. There is more room for action than in an ordinary chair car In the lavatories are hot and cold water There is a library with the daily papers and the best of books There is a lounge for those who are willing to sleep away the hours of flight.—World's Work.

Sand and Gravel.

One of the most important industries in the United States of which comparatively little is written is the production of sand and gravel. In 1911, according to a report by E. F. Burchard, just issued by the United States geological survey, the production of sand and gravel amounted to 66,946,959 short tons, valued at $21,158,5[illegible]3 The production of sand of all kinds was 40,253,977 tons, valued at $14,438,500 and that of gravel was 26,592,982 tons valued at $6,720,0[illegible]3. The production of glass sand was valued at $1,457,733, an increase over the figures of 1910, the sand used for building in 1911 was valued at $7,719,288, a slight decrease as compared with 1910 This was accounted for by less activity in 1911 in the building trade, including that of concrete construction The production of molding sand in 1911 was valued at $2,172,169 a marked decrease as compared with 1910 The production of all other sands in 1911 such as sand for grinding and polishing fire sand engine sand and filtration sand, was valued at $3,043,012 an increase of over a million dollars in value as compared with 1910

Imagination.

That imagination often lights the way to discoveries that would never be made by matter-of-fact plodding has proved true over and over again Illustrations of this in the history of chemical science are as numerous as in other fields of discovery. In this connection the Journal of the American Medical Association calls to mind that oxygen was merely a principle in Lavoisier in 1777, and that when, a century later, it was produced in liquified form "the metaphor had become a reality." When Harvey was writing of the blood he wondered whether there might not be motion, as it were, in a circle, the Journal says "he expressed in metaphoric language what only later became the fact of the circulation which was given visible demonstration by Malpighi," and adds, "the fabric of progress is woven from legitimate dreams to a greater extent than the practical man is wont to realize or is willing to admit."

Social Forms and Entertainments

How to Raise Money.

Our Sunday school class, consisting of eight girls about 15 years of age, wish to donate some money to our new church. Please suggest to us how we could raise this money.—Maple Leaf.

There are many ways to make money Not knowing the circumstances in your case, it is hard to suggest I attended a very clever "experience" meeting where each girl had made a dollar by her own efforts during the summer vacation Of course the dollar limit was not obligatory, but all had to make 100 cents

One girl made currant jelly and sold it to her friends at so much a glass, another pressed her brother's trousers, one stopped buying ice cream soda, and one saved carfare

You might have one or two sales on Saturday afternoon for housewives having all sorts of home-cooked delicacies I am sure with eight clever girls the new church will receive a liberal donation

A Difficult Question.

Your advice has helped more than one girl, so I come to you for the first time, hoping to be helped also I have been engaged to a young man for a year, but we do not feel able to marry now and probably will not for two or three years What we want to know is, is it right for us to still be engaged, knowing this? We have talked of breaking the engagement, but as yet we have not, not knowing which is best to do. I do not believe in long engagements. We are both anxious to do the right thing, whatever that is.—Unhappy.

Now don't be unhappy about the situation, but just agree this way: break the engagement with the full consent of you both, then when the time comes that circumstances will permit the marriage, why do it. You are perfectly right about long engagements. They are not fair. You should both feel perfectly free: some one else may come into your lives, you cannot tell

A Wedding Supper.

We are about to give a wedding luncheon and cannot decide what to serve that would be dainty and yet elaborate The supper or luncheon is to be served at 8 p. m., and we would like to have courses and desire you to arrange the menu. We want as elaborate an affair as you think would be in keeping One thing that I had better mention that may assist you in arranging the menu is that we wish to serve cold turkey for the meat.—Mother.

At that hour you should serve a supper, not a luncheon, which is a middle of the day function Serve cold turkey, escalloped oysters, hot rolls, olives, celery, cranberry jelly, then a fruit salad, cheese straws, ice cream in individual forms, coffee and the wedding cake

To Entertain Informally.

Can you suggest some way of entertaining a party of young people between the ages of 20 and 30, very informally? There will be about 12 in the party Also what would you suggest for simple refreshments, and prizes, if they be awarded?—X. C. L.

Did you ever hear of a really new method of entertaining? Nearly every novelty is only something old done in a new way. I think cards are the best in most cases, with perhaps a little contest at the end while the hostess sees to refreshments The other day I saw a jolly hour spent in guessing what flowers each guest represented by wearing some article to indicate the blossom. The rose, peony, violet, tiger lily, pansy, etc., were there

Marking the Bridal Silver.

Is silver to be given a bride always engraved with the initials of her maiden name? Is her first name permissible to use?—M. D.

Yes, both silver and linen bear the initials of the bride Near and dear friends sometimes use the first name, and sometimes a pet cognomen is engraved on a personal gift. This is done on silver picture frames which are much in vogue at present, presumably to hold the husband-elect's photograph.

MAYOR SMITH WINS FIGHT FOR CITY

City Council Hears Open Letter and Stands by Mayor With Only One Vote in Opposition

Painesville Electric Plant a Big Winner if City Will Pay for Its Own Street Lighting---Read the Best Statement of Conditions Ever Presented to Taxpayers

To The Council of The City of Painesville
Gentlemen.—

At your last meeting there was introduced and passed the first reading an ordinance entitled, "An Ordinance to provide for the Issue of Bonds of the City of Painesville in the sum of Five Thousand Dollars to purchase additional equipment for, and to extend the lines of the Electric Light Department."

As there was some opposition to this ordinance among your members, and as there has recently been considerable discussion in the local newspaper relative to the municipal light plant, I feel that it is proper for me at this time to submit to you not only for your own use, but also for the information of the public, a brief statement of the facts relative to the light plant and its operation down to the present time.

In preparing this statement, I have called to my assistance the Secretary of the Sinking Fund Trustees, the present management of The Electric Light Plant and my Attorney

The first municipal plant owned by the Village of Painesville was operated about twenty-one years It furnished street lighting only, and was supported entirely by taxation Thus making a continual outgo and no income When it was outgrown and nearly worn out, the Council decided to build a new plant that could ultimately furnish commercial lighting, and thus give the city the advantages of that business. The new plant began operation in 1908 For the first few months it furnished street lighting only In 1909 a second engine and dynamo were installed and the city entered into the business of commercial lighting The sale of current for power purposes was begun on July 1, 1909, and for commercial lighting soon thereafter. There at once arose from the sale of electric current and commercial lighting, a revenue which has steadily grown with the extension of the distributing system. The receipts from commercial lighting and power service and the operating expenses of the plant by years from 1909 to the present time are as follows:

| | Receipts | Operating Expenses |
|---|---|---|
| 1909 | $ 660.00 | $5464.13 |
| 1910 | 6416.85 | 8594.85 |
| 1911 | 9873.52 | 8565.86 |
| 1912 (Jan. 1 to Nov. 1) | 10104.99 | 8017.69 |

These receipts do not include any revenue from taxation. These expenditures cover operating expense only, and no new construction or added equipment

Previous to 1909 the electric lighting plant had been entirely supported by taxation, but with the increase of receipts from commercial business, a new policy was adopted. Operating expenses were paid as far as possible from the receipts of the plant and as little as possible from taxation. This is best shown by the following statement of tax moneys paid out for operating expenses during the same period above referred to.

| | |
|---|---|
| 1909 | $4804.13 |
| 1910 | 2178.00 |
| 1911 | 250.00 |
| 1912 | 000.00 |

In 1911 the Council issued $2000 of bonds for extension of lines, but this can not be credited to the city for street lighting, as it was then derived from taxation and in effect created a further liability against the lighting plant.

The years 1910 and 1911 cover the period of the Burrows Administration After having adopted this new policy as to the maintainance of the electric light plant, that administration passed an ordinance providing that the city should pay to the light plant for all street lights used at the rate of $60 per arc light

There were at this time 131 street arcs in use and also a number of incandescent lights in the alleys, city hall and other places, sufficient to bring the total charge thus created against the city and in favor of the municipal light plant, up to approximately $9000 a year.

Under the state law then and now in force the expense of street lighting is to be paid from the public service fund. This ordinance did not designate any other source from which the money could be derived to pay this $9000. So it must be assumed that it was intended to come from that fund In June preceeding the passage of this ordinance, the same council had passed the tax levy ordinance which was to provide the funds for the year 1912. The levy for the public service fund would raise for public service purposes for 1912 a total of $10796.00. Out of this service fund there must be paid, not only the city's bill for street lighting, but also the total cost of street cleaning, street repairing, maintenance of parks, the band concerts, salaries of the director of service, of his clerk and of the city engineer, and the maintenance of the city hall. I have never learned how the former council having made a tax levy for service fund that would produce only $10796.00 and knowing that all these other expenses must be paid from that service fund, could have thought it possible that this Administration could also pay a bill of $9000 out of that fund.

It may be that they expected that the city would be given a credit on that $9000 for the amount of bonds and interest to be paid by the city for the light plant during 1912. The ordinance did not so provide, but I for one believe that such a credit should be given. I also believe that the rate of $60 per arc light named in that ordinance was too high, and that it is relatively higher than the rates fixed for private customers at the same time Watt meters were installed in the light plant on Nov 19th, 1911. On Nov 19 1912, they registered a year's production of current Computing the cost of street arcs for the year ending Nov 1st, 1912, on the basis of the production as measured by the Watt meters, after allowing 4 per cent interest and 7 per cent depreciation on the cost of the plant (approximately $80,000), we find that the actual cost of street arcs was less than $45.00 each for the year

It is evident that with an increasing production of current the cost of street arcs will decrease from year to year I suggest to the Council that the amount which the city should pay for its street lighting should be determined each year upon the basis of the actual cost of the year before I am informed that this is the plan followed in Cleveland I would also suggest that either this amount should be raised as a part of the service fund by taxation and paid to the electric light plant each year, and then a transfer made from electric light receipts to the Sinking Fund to meet bonds and interest falling due; or else the ordinance should be amended to provide for crediting to the city upon its bill for lighting, the amount of electric light bonds and interest paid from the city's Sinking Fund raised by taxation

I am informed that the levy for service fund made by this Council last June will probably be sufficient to pay a proper charge for street lighting for 1913.

The effect of the ordinance fixing a charge of $60 per arc light against the city has been to embarass the present Council. As was to be anticipated, not a cent of tax money from the levy of 1911 has been available to apply upon the year's lighting bill of approximately $9000. The city has however paid out for the light plant, through the Sinking Fund Trustees, during the year 1912 as follows:

|---|---|
| To retire bonds falling due | $2500.00 |
| Interest on bonds | 1290.00 |
| Total | $3790.00 |
| To this should be added | $1500.00 |

the proceeds of a certificate of indebtedness issued by the Council some months ago, and which must be carried over to 1913, and paid from the revenues of that year.

This sum was used for new construction and equipment and so can not be charged against operating expenses.

| | |
|---|---|
| | $3790.00 |
| | 1500.00 |
| The total amount received is | $5290.00 |

Leaving a balance of $3710, which will be due Dec 31, 1912 to the light plant from the city, according to the terms of the ordinance

The inability of the city to pay to the light plant its bill for street lighting during the current year has also embarassed the Director of Service in making needed extension of the lines. There has been no deficiency for operating expenses, but there has been and is a continual call for further extensions of the service and additional equipment For months there has been a considerable list of people asking for service The management of the plant has taken care of the customers, in order, as rapidly as possible During the year ending Nov 1, 1912, $4904.73 has been expended on New Equipment and construction Of this amount $1500 was the proceeds of the certificate of indebtedness above mentioned and $3404.73 was taken from the receipts from Commercial business However the demand for electric current has increased more rapidly than the capacity of the distributing system. One hundred and ninety six new customers have been connected during the past ten months and there are yet several on the waiting list

The capacity of the generators to produce current is not nearly reached Every added customer means a corresponding decrease in the cost of producing current, because the charges for interest and depreciation, and the labor pay rolls remain substantially the same whether the generators are run on a full load or on a half load

The most urgent needs of the plant at this time are additional meters, transformers and wires with larger carrying capacity, from the plant up town, to replace the present wires which will be utilized in other parts of the system The addition of this equipment will enable the plant to care for all customers now waiting and also those who will probably apply for service for some time to come

If the city were now able to pay the $3710 which it owes for lighting, this bond issue light would be avoided, but under the circumstances, there is no other way to provide for this new equipment now necessary I have gone into the details of this situation this length because an impression seems to have gotten abroad that this bond issue is proposed because of some deficiency or failure in the working of the electric light plant itself The fact is, that the deficiency is a deficiency in tax funds, and the failure was only the failure of the former Council to make a tax levy sufficient to pay the charge which it created against the city The electric light plant itself has exceeded the expectation of all, in the success of its operation, especially so during the year ending November 1st, 1912, while the city itself has been unable to pay its light bill to the plant, the plant has come forward with receipts from commercial lighting during the same period sufficient to pay all operating expenses and to furnish more than three thousand dollars for extension of lines and new equipment.

The receipts from commercial lighting and power service and the expenses of operation for the year ending Nov 1st 1912, given by months are as follows:

| | Receipts | Operating Expenses |
|---|---|---|
| 1911 | | |
| November | $ 936.68 | $ 667.50 |
| December | 1198.51 | 851.12 |
| 1912 | | |
| January | 1216.64 | 650.57 |
| February | 999.47 | 843.83 |
| March | 888.22 | 954.72 |
| April | 1073.08 | 1070.47 |
| May | 835.95 | 367.22 |
| June | 1086.90 | 776.12 |
| July | 942.55 | 824.91 |
| August | 894.06 | 523.99 |
| September | 1023.26 | 1018.49 |
| October | 1144.86 | 987.67 |
| | $12240.18 | $9536.31 |

How in the face of these facts can anyone complain of the municipal electric light plant? Rather let them ask, how would the city have paid for its street lighting without the light plant? There is another thing which must be borne in mind in this connection. These receipts from commercial lighting have been earned upon a very low schedule of rates. By the same ordinance that fixed the charge for street lighting, the former Council reduced the rates to be charged to private consumers of electric lighting

And these rates were also to take effect after they went out of office. The price for the first 50 K. W. was reduced from 10 cents to 7 cents, the minimum charge from $1.00 to 50 cents and corresponding reductions for more than 100 K. W.

As far as I have learned, the light rates then fixed and which are still in force, are the lowest for the small consumers of any town in the state but one, and that one is a town on the Ohio River which owns a coal mine from which it digs its own coal for its own electric light plant Our rates are also as low or lower for the large consumer as the rates in any of the villages or smaller cities in this part of the State That you may compare them with the lighting rates in force in some of our neighboring towns, I submit the following schedule of rates in force

| | Min charge | 1st 50 K W | 2nd 50 K W | 3rd 50 K W | 4th 50 K W | Next K W 300 | All over 300 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Ashtabula | 50c | 10c | 8c | 7c | 6c | 5c | [illegible] |
| Conneaut | 75c | 8c | 8c | 6c | 6c | 6c | 5c |
| Willoughby | 1.00 | 8c | 8c | 8c | 8c | 8c | |
| Painesville | 50c | 7c | 7c | 6c | 5c | 5c | 5c |

Ashtabula also allows a 5 per cent discount if bill is paid before the 15th of the month

Closing this communication I wish to ask you to give your unanimous approval to the ordinance now pending before you

WYNNE S. SMITH Mayor

Councilman McLeod seems to believe that the C. P. & E. Ry. Co. needs at least one representative on the city council, but he is making quite an unusual spectacle of himself when he stands as an obstructionist with nothing to offer as a substitute. We hear a great many people say that Painesville should buy where it can buy electricity the cheapest. But who has offered to sell electricity cheaper than we can make it ourselves? Certainly Willoughby, Fairport and Richmond do not buy it cheaper even with long time franchise grants, and there seems no other competitor in the field than the one supplying electricity to these villages Mr McLeod will sustain his position as an obstructionist and knocker when he has something better to offer Painesville than it now has, as shown by the report read to the Council Monday night. He should get the C. P. & E. to make a proposal in writing and show that he means business

—o—

The town of Kincaid, Kan., sets a distinguished example to the nation. Before election partisan feeling, as the old phrase has it, "ran high"; the town was divided into three parts—one Wilson, one Roosevelt, one Taft Then election day came, and it was the democrats who had the chance to celebrate But a celebration is good fun, and, after all, politics is only politics So a mass-meeting of jubilation was held, and it was attended not only by Wilson men, but by all Taft and Roosevelt men, and the pictures of the defeated candidates were jocularly turned to the wall And, in heaven's name, why not? Why should sensible, healthy American citizens cross to the other side of the street to avoid meeting a political enemy? Why should there be any political enemies, anyway? Politics is largely a game of electing men to office, but it should not be a game of personalities. When all the men are worthy and there are no principles at stake—as is very often the case in local campaigns and many of wider scope—a single lost friendship is a disgrace. Kincaid, Kan., is on the right track

South Brooklyn Plant Increases Volume

Business at the South Brooklyn municipal lighting station is increasing rapidly and conditions are such at the Collinwood lighting plant that provision must be made to handle demands for additional service. Many new applications for lighting service are being received daily. Friday fifteen contracts were closed.

Total receipts for the two plants during the first ten months of 1912 were $150,596.15, as against $113,400.21 for the corresponding period in 1911 Operating expenses for the ten months were $79,740.89

Accident Occurs Directly in Front of James J. Hill's Country Home—Women in Party Escape Uninjured.

St. Paul, Minn.—Howard James, director of purchases of the Great Northern railroad, and Samuel B. Plechner, purchasing agent of the same road, were instantly killed when the automobile in which they were driving turned turtle and crushed them to death.

Women Are Uninjured.

Mrs. Plechner, Miss Helen James and Miss Margaret Mann, who were riding in the same car with the two men, were uninjured. Mrs. Plechner lacerated her wrist after the accident in pulling Miss Mann from underneath the car.

The accident occurred directly in front of James J. Hill's country home, "North Oaks," when Mr. James attempted to drive ahead of another car occupied by two men and their wives. Mr. James had signalled with his horn that he would pass their car and the automobile turned to the right to allow the James car leeway.

The spot where the accident occurred is filled with sand. The front wheels of the James machine refused to climb the grade of sand and when a few yards past the other machine, toppled a second on two wheels and then slowly turned over.

Fright Paralyzes Fair Riders.

Apparently frozen to their seats by fright, none of the James party attempted to jump. Pinned in the front seat by the gates of the car they were crushed to death without an opportunity for escape. The projecting automobile fortunately raised the tonneau a little off the ground, which probably saved the lives of the women.

Employes of the Hill estate went to the rescue and, by the combined effort of eight or ten men, the car was lifted and pulled off the bodies of Mr. James and Mr. Plechner.

Mr. James was a nephew of the late Marshal Field of Chicago and had been with the Great Northern railway for 20 years or more, a part of the time having been located at Buffalo, N. Y., where he directed the affairs of the Great Northern Steamship Co.

Mr. Plechner also had been with the Great Northern for many years.

BIG LABOR DISPUTE ENDED

Arbitration Board Grants Increased Wages to Engineers on Railroads East of Chicago.

Washington, D. C.—The most important American labor dispute submitted since the anthracite coal strike in 1902 has just been terminated by the award and report of the board of arbitration entrusted with the settlement of the controversy between 52 eastern railroads and the 30,000 engineers in their employ.

The award of the board, while granting substantial increases over the rates on some lines east of Chicago, was virtually a compromise decision between the engineers and their employers. In granting the award the board stipulated that all rates higher than the minima decided upon should be continued in force.

The more important of the awards are as follows: The minimum wage of $4.25 for 100 miles or less for engineers in the passenger service, with an overtime rate of 68 cents per hour with an average speed of 20 miles an hour, a minimum of $4.75 for engineers in through freight service per day of 100 miles or less, with overtime pro rata after ten hours, 25 cents additional per day of ten hours or less in switching service.

60 KILLED IN THEATRE PANIC

People Are Trampled to Death When Operator of Picture Machine Shouts "Fire!"

Bilbao, Spain.—Sixty persons, 50 of them children, were killed in the panic which followed a cry of fire in a moving picture theatre. At least 50 persons were injured, the exact number not being known because many of them were taken home by friends. One woman was among the dead. The operator of the picture machine shouted "fire!" when a film ignited. Immediately there was a wild stampede for the lone exit. Practically all of the dead were crushed to death under the feet of the surging mass. The operator of the machine easily extinguished the fire in his cage.

Police Raid "Dawn Dance."

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The notorious "Dawn Dance" given once each year by the Pastime Athletic club was raided early in the morning by the police, under Inspector Hartley. Sixty couples were taken in the motor patrols to general police station, where cash bail of $50 was demanded of each. Most of the men produced rolls and put up $100 for the appearance of themselves and their ladies. Those who had not enough for the release of both put up forfeits for the girls and remained in the lockup themselves.

Fire Wipes Out Town.

Pine Ridge, Indian Agency, S. D.—A prairie fire which devastated a section of the country one hundred miles long and ten miles wide swept over the Sioux reservation and burned itself out in the breaks of the river far to the east. The town of White Owl is reported entirely destroyed and dozens of homesteaders were burned out.

There are rumors of deaths in the burned district, but these cannot be verified, as all telephone wires are down.

TURKISH PRISONERS ON THE MARCH

THIS remarkable photograph just received from the scene of the Bulgarian operations in front of Adrianople shows a great body of Turkish prisoners on the march, guarded by the Bulgarians who captured them.

PAINTS STAMBOUL AS CITY OF SORROW

CORRESPONDENT TELLS OF SICKENING SIGHTS HE WITNESSED ON THE STREETS.

CHOLERA, DYSENTERY, TYPHUS

The Floors of Beautiful Mosques Are Strewn With Stricken Soldiers and Refugees, Some Dead, Others Ready to Follow.

By the Special Correspondent of the I. N. S. and the London Chronicle.

Constantinople, Turkey.—It has been at times difficult to think of this as a doomed city, a description which every journalist in the world must by now have applied to Constantinople. Here one can live through the exciting days as though the war were the remotest of horrors. One must go out and seek if one would touch the fringe of its river, to see "the red laugh of war." In Pera is peace. The restaurants, cafes and music halls suffer scarcely at all.

CARAVAN OF MISERY.

Leave Pera and Galata behind, throw a small coin to one of the crowd of toll gatherers who guard either of the gates across the Golden Horn and you enter the war scene. Across the bridge streams a train of rough wagons drawn by oxen with painful slowness. One by one these carts, with those who accompany them, are taken aboard ship to be sent to Asia till the vessel is packed to its utmost capacity, then in hopeless calm the foremost of those left sit down—people and animals—where they stood to wait. It may mean to them a cold night without food or shelter.

Endlessly this caravan of misery, bound to no one knows where, stretches over the bridge through the narrow, twisting, rank smelling streets of Stamboul, past the gates, beyond the walls of the city. From the horizon it pours strangely onward, hopelessly looking not back, expecting only the dawn of nothing.

CHOLERA, DYSENTERY, TYPHUS.

In this pouring tide of war every crazy wagon bears the wreck of a homestead, the poor miserable salvage from a peasant home. Everything which would not pack and pack quickly into the wagon was left behind. In the panic of these refugees who fled before the rumor of approaching war there was not always time to gather the whole family together. I found mothers and fathers who had no idea where their children were. There were children hanging on despairingly to the wagons of other families, their fathers and mothers miles away in the imaginable confusion. They have no story to tell, these refugees. They fled likely at night from their homes. They mutter that they have been living without food, tramping over roads hard, now deep in mud.

Many have been stricken down by swift and merciful, one thinks, disease. Only the weather has been kind. Look into the wagons and one is almost certain to find some one ill with cholera, dysentery or typhus lying on filthy rags and terribly shaken in the springless cart as it lumbers over the rough road. Now and then some poor wretch will rush from a cart trying to find the nearest water. After a short, erring struggle the victim will fall down and writhe for a time and then lie still. The war has claimed another victim.

MOSQUES FILLED WITH VICTIMS.

Nowhere are such hideous sights to be seen as within the sacred Stamboul mosques. Round the buildings are the refugees, many thousands struck down by the disease which can only mean death. In Stamboul the great mosque of St. Sophia is a most conspicuous feature. The interior is gorgeous, for the great temples of the old world were plundered so that the Emperor Justinian might say, "I have excelled the work of Solomon"; but today the visitor can scarcely turn his eyes to note its treasures and glories of the carven centuries. On their platform the muezzins rise and fall to faintly spoken praying. In a corner a few of the devout are performing their religious rites.

Some days ago I would have watched them, but this morning there was only one thing to note. Scattered over the floor lay stricken soldiers and refugees, some dead, many almost at the end of their troubles—a grim, huddled mass of pitiable humanity. The wildness was out of their eyes, only weariness was left. Heroic doctors were doing their best, but what a fearful fight was theirs! Small in numbers they war against a foe which receives incessant formidable reinforcement. They cannot hope to win save a little fight here and there. The greatest struggle will go against them, yet they hold to their ground manfully and well, against all the cohorts which the disease hurls against them.

STREET OF SORROW.

To go out into the sunshine again is only to walk through a never ending street of sorrow. Sometimes one sees food and clothing given to refugees as a dark caravan lights up here and there with brightness brought by unexpected joy. The wastage of this war as seen in Stamboul is really frightful. To wipe out the many iniquities of Ottoman rule is demanding a stunning sacrificial price that none can count. Yet what unrolls itself before one's eyes here is but a tithe of the tragedy of it all. We talk lightly of the glory of war. We may be able to look across its horrors and still see the blue in heaven, but I doubt if there can be shouts of victory or joy bells loud enough to efface from one's memory the awful horrors brought from the desolated countryside by the streaming, struggling caravan of human misery which pours relentlessly into the city of the Golden Horn—the city which can cloak so amply such a stupendous tragedy and smile with tumultuous humor in its heart.

PENSIONS U. S. EX-PRESIDENTS

Carnegie Will Give $25,000 Annually to Retired Chief Executives and Their Widows.

New York City.—Following a meeting of the trustees of the Carnegie Foundation held in the home of Andrew Carnegie it was announced that it had been decided to offer pensions to the future ex-presidents of the United States and to the unmarried widows of ex-presidents. The offer will be made to those entitled to it without application being made. The announcement covering this part of the meeting is as follows:

"Provision has been made through this corporation for a pension for each future ex-president and his widow, unmarried, of $25,000 per year as long as these remain unprovided for by the nation that they may be able to spend the latter part of their lives devoting their unique knowledge of public affairs to the public good free from pecuniary cares. These pensions will be promptly offered to the ex-presidents or their widows so that no applications will be required from them."

Solon Would Aid Ex-Presidents.

Washington, D. C.—Representative Burleson of Texas will introduce in the coming session of congress a paragraph in the legislative, executive, judiciary and appropriation bill which, if enacted, will make unnecessary a gratuity to former presidents of the United States from the wealth of Andrew Carnegie. Mr. Burleson's law would regard former presidents as still representatives of the people. They should be entitled to a seat on the floor of the house of representatives and to its privileges except that of voting. They should receive an annual salary of $17,500.

Kills Wife to Stop Suffering.

Paris, France.—Yielding to his wife's pleadings that she be put to death to end her suffering after she had twice attempted to commit suicide, M. Beguery, a sexagenarian, killed her with three revolver shots at their home in Sannois near this city. M. Beguery immediately surrendered to the police. The sister of the wife called at the police station and said to M. Beguery:

"Beguery, you are a saint. I know what she suffered for a year and what you suffered."

Shoots Woman, Kills Self.

Reno, Nev.—Shooting Mrs. Estelle W. Baggott of Los Angeles and New York through the wrist and abdomen and inflicting probably fatal wounds, H. S. Weems, son of a wealthy Baltimore family, turned his gun to his temple at Moana Springs, just outside of Reno, and instantly killed himself. The tragedy occurred at the baths.

In a long letter addressed to the San Francisco Examiner Weems tells of marrying four women and divorcing three, the first one dying.

Aims Blow at Money Trust.

Washington, D. C.—Intending to deal an effective blow against the money trust, the house committee on banking and currency will recommend that all clearing house associations and stock exchanges shall be denied the use of the mails under the postal laws and the Sherman anti-trust law until they can be brought under federal supervision and regulation similar to national banks. Samuel Untermyer, counsel for the committee, is drafting the federal law. It is to be presented at the approaching congress.

"Better to be Steer Than Man."

Boston, Mass.—Dr. Harvey Wiley, the pure food expert, stopped in this city while enroute for Washington. The doctor stated that it was better to be a steer than a man. In explanation Dr. Wiley said:

"A man may have smallpox and travel in a Pullman car. No one ever thinks that a Pullman should be fumigated each time it is used. But in the case of the transfer of cattle every precaution known to man is taken to prevent the spread of contagious disease among valuable cattle."

RUFFS WILSON'S TEMPER

CAMERA MAN IS THREATENED WITH THRASHING.

President-elect Objects When Photographer Snaps Picture, the Latter Making an Apology.

Hamilton, Bermuda.—A photographer ruffled President-elect Wilson's usually equable temper and the man with the camera came dangerously close to receiving a thrashing from a very distinguished thrasher.

The president-elect had requested that no pictures be taken of him while on his vacation, particularly when at rest on his cottage grounds. One bold photographer, finding the governor in a characteristic pose, quickly snapped his picture. The governor for a moment was overcome with anger.

"You are no gentleman," he shouted. "If you want a good thrashing keep that up. I can take care of myself in these things. I came here especially to avoid photographers. I think my wishes ought to be respected at least in my own yard."

The photographer offered profuse apologies, but apparently they did not mollify the governor. Incidentally the photographer kept the plate he had made.

COAL MINERS WIN STRIKE

The Kanawha Men Obtain Concessions Through an Agreement Just Signed.

Charleston, W. Va.—What is believed to forecast the end of the great coal strike in the Kanawha division of West Virginia was announced in a signed wage agreement between the union miners and the officials of the National Bituminous Coal & Coke Co.

The agreement practically recognizes the union, provides for an increase of about 21 per cent in wages, reduces tonnages, permits the miners to organize, provides for a nine-hour work day and gives men now on strike preference.

U. S. WORLD'S BREAD BASKET

Sends More than 100,000 Bushels of Wheat Abroad During the Past Ten Months.

Washington, D. C.—The United States still is the "bread basket of the world," according to the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, which issued a report showing that this country is furnishing foodstuffs to other nations at a steadily rising ratio. While the exports of corn and meat fell off sharply, more than 100,000,000 bushels of wheat were sent abroad during the past 10 months, as against 83,000,000 during all of last year.

Schrank Sent to Asylum.

Milwaukee, Wis.—John Schrank, who shot Col. Theodore Roosevelt on the night of Oct. 14 in Milwaukee, is insane and was committed by Municipal Judge A. C. Backus to the Northern hospital for the insane, near Oshkosh, until cured. Commitment was pronounced following the presentation of an exhaustive report by a commission of five alienists in which the defendant was unanimously adjudged insane.

Asks Treasury Man to Quit.

Washington, D. C.—Secretary MacVeagh has asked for the resignation of Gideon C. Bantz as assistant treasurer of the United States because he is said not to be in sympathy with the administrative policy of the secretary. Mr. Bantz will be succeeded by Christian S. Pearce, at present chief of the division of banks, loans and postal savings. The resignation of Bantz, following so close that of Treasurer McClung, is admitted part of a plan of reorganization of the treasurer's office.

Policeman Dies While on Duty.

Erie, Pa.—Detective and Sergeant John T. Grant was shot dead while trying to enter the home of Henry Vesper. Grant was pounding at the door of the Vesper home demanding admittance when a shot fired through the door pierced Grant's heart. The police had been notified that a woman was being murdered in the Vesper home. Grant and Richard Crotty were sent to the place. Crotty, when he saw Grant was dead, smashed open the door, and found a young woman lying on the floor, bleeding.

13 DIE IN BIG BLOWUP

TWENTY-SIX OTHERS HURT AS DRY STARCH EXPLODES.

Men, With Clothes Afire, Stagger Out of Burning Debris of Wrecked Building and Collapse.

Waukegan, Ill.—The thousands of employes of the Corn Products Refining Co.'s plant had just returned from lunch when a large building known as the dry starch house blew up like a can of powder. Every man in the building was killed or injured. Thirteen dead and 26 hurt was the best estimate that could be obtained.

The explosion rocked the entire $4,000,000 plant. It shook windows in the town. It brought women and children who followed the fire engines as spectators and remained as wailing widows and orphans as the blackened forms of men were snatched from the flaming ruin or collected from places where they had been blown.

The building that blew up was three stories high and 125 feet square. A two-story frame cupola surmounted the roof.

It stood at the south end of the great plant. When the men employed in the starch house went to dinner there were 75,000 pounds of starch in the structure. It was shipping day and the regular force had been doubled to hasten the filling of the freight cars that stood on a side track. At 1:25 p. m., when the afternoon's work was well under way, every cubic inch of air in the building became red. The brick building was lifted into the air. Had the starch been dynamite the destruction could have been little more disastrous to the men inside.

The scene about the blazing debris was one of horror. With clothes aflame men staggered out into the air and collapsed.

Every automobile and cab in Waukegan was pressed into service to take the injured to the Jane McAlister hospital. Hysterical wives, mothers and children, alarmed by the terrific explosion, rushed to the scene, and it required the efforts of the entire police force of the town to keep them back from the flames.

Twelve of the injured men were Lithuanians. One was a Greek, another a Turk and there were several Russians and Americans.

The value of the building, machinery and contents destroyed by the explosion and fire was $100,000, fully covered by insurance.

SENATOR RAYNOR IS DEAD

United States Solon From Maryland Passes Away After Long Illness in Washington Home.

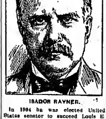
Rayner was born in Baltimore in 1850. He was admitted to the bar in Baltimore in 1870. In 1878 he was elected to the Maryland legislature, and in 1885 to the state senate.

In 1886 he resigned to become the democratic candidate for congressman, and was elected. He declined re-election for a fourth term, and was chosen attorney general of Maryland instead.



ISADOR RAYNER.

In 1904 he was elected United States senator to succeed Louis E. McComas, Republican. He was reelected for the term ending March 3, 1917.

The death of Senator Raynor changes the political complexion of the next senate and swings it from Democratic control to a tie. With his vote the Democrats had 49, or one more than a majority.

As the present governor of Maryland, Leo Goldsborough, is a Republican, the new Maryland appointee will probably be of that political faith, until the legislature meets, in January, 1914. This will give each party in the senate 48 votes.

Funeral services for Rayner were held at his former residence here.

Again Elect Dr. Anna Shaw.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The National Women Suffrage convention re-elected Dr. Anna Howard Shaw president. The result of the balloting was: Dr. Shaw, 201; Miss Laura Clay of Kentucky, 20; Mrs. Catherine Waugh McCollough of Illinois, 13; Miss Jane Addams of Chicago, 11. After the vote had been announced the election of Dr. Shaw was made unanimous. Several times during the session the delegates got into parliamentary tangles over the reading of the report of the committee on credentials.

Leaps 20 Stories to Death.

Chicago, Ill.—Possessed with the idea that she was pursued for dishonorable purposes, Miss Maude Van Deusen, 25, leaped from the 20th story of the McCormick building and was crushed to death. She jumped from a fire escape nearly 250 feet above the ground. Her body struck another fire escape at the first floor and bounded into a stone paved alleyway. Nearly all her bones were broken. Miss Van Deusen, according to papers found on her person, was a school teacher in Humboldt, Neb.

FIRST SIGHT OF WHITE FACE

How a German Won Confidence of People Who Had Never Before Seen a European.

Bangkok.—In the mountains of northern Malacca and southern Siam dwells a tribe of dwarf Negritos who, until a few months ago, knew nothing of the white man and his ways. From their hunting grounds they could almost see the foreign ships steam through the Malacca straits. Certain conveniences obtainable only from the whites had reached them through intermediate tribes; for example, they had become well acquainted with the Swedish safety matches, yet no white man had ever come in contact with them.

A German botanist, Albert Grubauer, not long ago set out to make acquaintance with these shy people. With a few native servants he stole quietly up into the mountains. For some time their patience was rewarded only with disappointment, but at last one morning they came upon a party of the little men. The Negritos dropped the bundles of rattan they were carrying and concealed themselves in the undergrowth.

The German and his men knew exactly what they were to do in such a case. They were not to go an inch in pursuit. No weapon was to be shown. One of the men who could speak a little of the native dialect, aired his accomplishment in the gentlest way. The white man was their good friend and had come to see them. And what wonderful presents he had brought for his friends! The white man and his servants extended their arms, which were loaded with bright cottons, strings of beads, many colored neckties, tobacco, and other tempting articles whose merits were extolled by the spokesman with all the eloquence he could command.

They knew the natives were behind the bushes looking at the tempting sight and listening to the exhortation. Then the visitors sat down, still holding out the beautiful presents. Finally an old man, the leader of the party, stuck his head out of the bush. He broke off a green twig and held it up. It was a sign of peace and the white man nodded to him. The ice was broken. The Negrito approached the European, they shook hands, some of the presents were distributed and the visitors became the guests of the little mountaineers. They were passed on from one group to another till Grubauer, after a considerable time, had completed his studies.

FIRST RIDE ON TRAIN AT 113

Aged Arkansas Woman, Accompanied by 88 Year Old Son, Goes to Joplin, Mo., to See the Sights.

Joplin, Mo.—Mrs. H. Keith, aged 113 years, and her youngest son, 88 years old, took their first ride on a passenger train recently. The train brought them from their home, several miles from a railroad, in southern Arkansas. Charles McManamy was the first patrolman in uniform they saw.

"Are you a policeman?" asked Mrs. Keith. "Well, we want you to show us how to get uptown. This is the first time my son and I ever have been in Joplin. We came here to see the sights."

"My, isn't this a big town!" exclaimed Mrs. Keith as she got her first glimpse of Joplin's busy thoroughfares.

Mrs. Keith needed no assistance as she walked. She appeared much younger than she is, and walked with a quick step and with shoulders erect. The son, too, was active. Mrs. Keith said she has three sons older than the one who accompanied her here. The eldest is 93, she said. All live with their mother or near her home. Her husband was killed in the Civil war.

CAST-OFF STOCKING A BANK

Rag Cutter in Rising Paper Mill at Housatonic, Mass., Finds $50 in Silk Hosiery.

Pittsfield, Mass.—Mrs. Mary Murphy, a rag-cutter in the Rising Paper mill, at Housatonic, was cutting up old hosiery for paper stock when, in a silk stocking, she fell a small roll, which proved to be $50 in $10 bills.

Some wearer of the silk hose had made the stocking a purse and forgot all about the money when the hose was discarded.

Mrs. Murphy is a widow and the find is to her a big blessing.

STRUCK BY TRAIN, JAILED

Farmer Fights Doctors, Rushed to Cell Instead of Hospital at Marion, O.

Marion, O.—After being struck by a freight, carried through the busiest portion of the city on the pilot and rushed to a hospital, William Williamson, a farmer, is locked up in the city prison instead of occupying a morgue slab or hospital cot. He was unhurt and became so obstreperous at the hospital that he had to be jailed.

TREASURER HAS PLAN

WILL RECOMMEND TO LEGISLATURE A MEASURE TO SAVE INTEREST.

Would Have Sum Set Aside for Use of Emergency Board to Avoid Necessity of Borrowing.

Columbus.—State Treasurer-elect John Brennan has a recommendation to make to the next general assembly under which he believes [illegible] thousand dollars a year can be saved and the state relieved from having to go out and borrow money from commercial banks while it has millions out on interest. He will recommend a change in the laws relating to the State Emergency Board.

At present the money appropriated by the board has to be secured from the banks at 4, 5 or 6 per cent interest. Since the general assembly adjourned in 1911 the Emergency Board has had to provide $243,625.22 for needs of various institutions. On this sum the state will keep on paying interest until the appropriation bill is passed by the General Assembly, and the cost to the state will be at least $15,000. The state's money in the banks draws a maximum of 3½ per cent interest.

Mr. Brennan's plan is for the general assembly to set aside a fund for the use of the State Emergency Board, which could be drawn out as needed. By this system the state would avoid paying out large sums in interest. If not used the appropriation could revert to the treasury. He would enjoin economy on the board.

That the state's fiscal year should be changed from November 15 to correspond with the government fiscal year is another suggestion. Mr. Brennan has another plan of issuing and sending out to all the newspapers a weekly treasury statement. Under the present system a daily statement goes to the governor.

In his annual report to the governor Adjutant General C. C. Weybrecht says that $10,000 annually can be saved by turning over to the State Board of Administration the custody of the statehouse and grounds. Each department now has its own janitor, with the result, he says, that there are far too many employes on the pay roll. It has been suggested that prisoners from the penitentiary be used for this work at no expense to the state.

John Miller Receives Appointment.

John I. Miller, of Van Wert, beginning the first day of the year, will have charge of upwards of $15,000,000 worth of state property. Gov. Harmon has announced that he will appoint Mr. Miller, who is chief engineer of public works, to be the new superintendent of public works and as such exercise all the duties and powers of the present state board of public works, which will pass out of existence on the first day of the new year, as provided by the new constitution. Mr. Miller has a tremendous job on his hands. The methods of the board are the same as when the department was created some 70 years ago. Mr. Miller must perfect a new system for the department. He will try to have one ready for submission to the legislature when it meets on January 1. He will map out a plan for the regulation of the department, providing for the creation of positions needed in its operation. His salary will not be fixed until after there is legislative action. There will be no authority to pay out a single penny until this is done. Mr. Miller will have as much responsibility as the treasurer of state has under the new order of things. His appointment is for one year.

Carter Wins In High Court.

The Ohio state supreme court upheld the decision of the circuit and the common pleas courts and ordered the reinstatement of Charles Carter as chief of police of Columbus. Carter was suspended about two months ago by Mayor George J. Karb, and Thos. O'Neil appointed as chief. The decision upholds the contention of the civil service commission and the lower courts that a mayor does not have a right to summarily dismiss a chief of police, but that charges must be filed with the civil service commission and that the ruling of the civil service commission is final.

Reduction in Insurance Rates.

With what is the most radical action officially taken since the institution of state insurance, the liability board of awards completely revised its schedule of rates by arbitrarily reducing them from 15 to 65 per cent. The decision is considered a broad step toward selling state insurance practically at cost. The board says its action is fully justified by its experience of the eight months it has been in actual operation and a study of rate-making.

Can Make Further Reductions.

That still further decreases in the rates charged to employers of labor for industrial accident insurance can be made with further experience with the Green compensation act is the declaration of Chairman T. J. Duffy, of the state liability board of awards, which recently announced reductions ranging from 15 to 65 per cent. These cuts were made with only eight months' experience, and now, with increasing business, the next eight months will show safety of further cuts.

A seat on the Columbus stock exchange was sold for $1,000, an advance of over $150 over the last previous sale. The seat was formerly held by M. C. Harvey, of Otis & Co., and was purchased by John H. Parsons & Co. Otis & Co. had three seats on the local exchange, one belonging to Charles H. Otis, another belonging to Frank L. Griffith and the one held by M. C. Harvey. The latter seat was no longer needed and was sold. The seat was formerly purchased by Parsons & Co. for a speculation.

Office to Be Created.

Ohio will have no chief justice, as provided in the new judicial amendments to the state constitution, until the legislature provides for the office and there is no duty devolving upon the governor to make an appointment. There will be no vacancy in the office of judge of the supreme court under the new constitution and there is no hindrance in the way of judges elected this fall taking their places; neither will there be any vacancies in the eight courts of appeals, and the elections held this fall for selection of circuit judges are every way valid.

These are three conclusions in an official opinion given by Attorney General Hogan to Governor Harmon.

In these conclusions the governor concurs, despite an original belief that the circuit judicial candidates at the fall election had been in a "moot" race and that the new governor would have to appoint the successful ones, just as if no elections had been held in the circuit judicial districts.

The effect of the ruling will be that the ordinary rotation in the office of the supreme court will obtain and Judge John A. Shauck will be the chief justice until the general assembly makes provision for the constitutional officer, his election, length of term, salary, etc.

To Have Rare Coin Collection.

Plans for the establishment in Columbus of a permanent exhibition of coins, medals, and tokens that pertain directly to the history of the state were given impetus at a session of the Ohio State Numismatic society in the studio of the Franklin County Curio Co., 13½ East State street. A general collection that is considered one of the best in the country is now controlled by the society and as soon as a suitable location is decided upon, it will be placed on display.

"Ohio is the only state in the United States to have such a society," declared Dr. J. M. Henderson, who was elected treasurer for the coming year, "and we intend to specialize in the coins and tokens of the state."

The officers elected for the coming year are: George J. Schwartz, president; W. J. Savage, vice president; Congressman W. A. Ashbrook, Johnstown, secretary, and Dr. Henderson, treasurer.

Gov. Harmon to Visit Europe.

On retirement from office January 13, Gov. Harmon will make an extended trip to Europe. It will be the first winter vacation he ever has had the chance to take. As a lawyer with a large practice he could not get away while the courts were in session.

He will take the Mediterranean trip, touring Egypt and Italian cities. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Harmon and his daughter, Mrs. Wright. At London his daughter, Mrs. Cassatt, will join the family party. He expects to be abroad two or three months.

On his return, the governor will resume the practice of law at Cincinnati as senior member of the firm of Harmon, Colston, Goldsmith and Hoadly. During his incumbency of the office of governor, his membership in the firm has been nominal. He withdrew from any interest in the earnings of the firm lest some case in which the firm might be retained might even remotely be affected by his official position.

Electric Men Hold Meeting.

That the state should deal more fairly with electric railway companies was the burden of the address of Gaylord Thompson, of Springfield, O., chief engineer of the Ohio Electric railway, in the principal address of the closing session of the fall meeting. He declared that the red flag had been flaunted so consistently that investors have been frightened.

That interurbans must get away from the street railway business and provide equipment on the steam railway basis was the comment of C. L. Henry, of Indianapolis. He believes that roadbeds should be so reconstructed that a greater part of the freight business may be handled by electric lines. Declaring that only 15 per cent of gross receipts come from freight business, he said that 75 to 85 per cent should come from this source.

Will Not Pension Deserted Women.

That mothers deserted by husbands will not be classified as beneficiaries under the proposed mothers' pension bill, was declared by H. H. Shirer, secretary of the state board of charities, who explained to those attending the monthly conference of the council of churches at the Central Presbyterian Church the report of the commission appointed by Gov. Harmon to recodify the laws relative to child welfare.

"To pension such mothers," said Mr. Shirer, "would, in reality, be putting a premium on non-support. On the other hand the intention is to help all mothers who are deserving and, in this way, the bill would include all who are widows or whose husbands are incapacitated."

Policies Declared Taxable.

That "special privilege" policies in life insurance companies are taxable, was held by the tax commission in a ruling to the auditor of Summit county. The decision affects those policies in which the principal due the beneficiary is left with the insurance company and an annuity paid. This, in most cases, amounts to 5 per cent. The stand that these policies are not taxable has been taken by a number of insurance companies within the state, but the commission now declares they are investments.

In the course of his official proclamation, setting aside Thursday, November 28, to be observed as Thanksgiving day, Governor Harmon observes "our faith in the divine goodness is put to no test, for our blessings have not come in disguise. They smile frankly upon us and our welcome does not lag."

The proclamation further calls upon all to remember those who may be suffering under misfortune and affliction. The proclamation is signed by the governor and attested by C. H. Graves, secretary of state.

The contract provided for the permanent establishment of the shops in Lima, stipulating the employment of at least 200 men.

Hamilton, O.—The Ohio Electric company has under consideration a plan to extend its limited service to Cincinnati at some very remote date. The service has only been used between here and Dayton during the last three months and the need of a faster service to the Queen City is felt by the officials of the company but the question of turning the big cars makes it impossible.

Is Engaged by Cincinnati School Board to Succeed Dyer.

Cincinnati, O.—Without a dissenting voice the Board of Education concurred in the committee's report recommending the selection of Randall Judson Condon, Superintendent of Schools of Providence, R. I., to succeed Dr. F. P. Dyer as the head of the Cincinnati school system. The salary to be paid Dr. Condon is $10,000 a year, which is $3,000 more than was received by Dr. Dyer and $5,000 more than the new Superintendent is at present obtaining.

Dr. Condon will arrive in Cincinnati to take up his new duties January 1, and the term of his contract will begin on that day and terminate on August 31, 1914. If Condon has proved satisfactory to the board during this time he will be re-elected for a term of five years, the rules of the board making it impossible to elect a superintendent for the first term for a longer period than two years.

BAGS OF GOLD MISSING.

Dayton, O.—Bags of gold containing $9,900 were stolen here from Frank Seibert, a farmer. Seibert, who received a check for $9,900 in payment for a farm he had sold, requested that the money be paid to him in gold. Bellefontaine, O.—Fifty residents of Roundhead, a village near here, were taken violently ill after breakfasting on buckwheat cakes. The buckwheat had been bought from a neighboring farmer. ### Hall, Whose Clever Pitching Helped Win Championship, Began Career at First Base.

Pitcher Charley Hall, whose clever work aided materially in winning the American league championship for the Boston Red Sox, began his professional baseball career on the Santa Barbara (Cal.) team, playing first base. The first game he ever pitched was for the San Francisco team of the Pacific Coast league in 1904. The next year he joined the Cincinnati team, going from there to Columbus, O. In 1908 he was with St. Paul, and went to the Boston Americans in the middle of the 1910 season. He is a right hander, but bats with his left.

Huge Profits for McAleer.

The Boston American league club has proved a little gold mine for James R. McAleer during his one year's connection with the team. He has $200,000 in the Boston club, of which $130,000 represents his savings. The remaining $70,000 was borrowed without interest from President Comiskey, of the Chicago White Sox. McAleer tells with pride that for the last eight years his income as manager and scout has been $20,000 a season. He saved his money. Already the profits for this season nearly equal his investment, and counting the world's series he will have a snug sum left over.

Peculiar Touchdown.

One of the most remarkable errors ever made in a football game is reported from Lowell, where Dean academy played the Lowell Technical school. He was in full flight when he discovered his mistake. He turned and ran back 65 yards in the right direction and made a touchdown.

ORIGINAL 'BONEHEAD' PLAYER

Inventor of Expressions Which Have Become Byword in Baseball Was Southern Leaguer.

Eddie Ashenback, the well-known minor league manager who died recently, was the inventor of the expression "bonehead," which, with "concrete dome," "cement skull," solid ivory, has become a byword in baseball. When Ashenback was managing the Shreveport team of the Southern league several years ago, he had a good catcher, who could also hit some, but he had the very serious weakness of not being able to gauge a foul fly no matter how easy it was.

One day a batter raised a high foul directly over the plate, and the catcher, misjudging it, was hit squarely on top of the head by the descending sphere, which knocked off his mask and bounded away about thirty feet. That night Ashenback finished his supper early and was passing out of the dining room when he happened to walk behind his catcher, who was devouring his evening meal with gusto and enthusiasm. Stopping at the table Ed passed his hands over the backstop's head, feeling for the bump which he thought would surely be there on account of the contact with the ball that afternoon. But there was no lump to be felt. "No wonder," said Ash. "How could there be a bump? Your head is a solid bone."

Usual Kind of Office Seekers.

"Well, how's every little thing, now that election is over?" asked the recently arrived washing machine agent.

"'Bout as they are every place else, I reckon," a bit pessimistically replied the landlord of the Turgidtown tavern. "The banker, the storekeepers, and lumber yard man, the doctor, the stock buyer, the blacksmith, and all the rest of the business men who have always 'peared to be capable of managing their various sized affairs successfully, are going on calmly and carefully attending to 'em, while all the triflin', one-gallused incompetents that have never had any affairs of their own to attend to and wouldn't be capable of conducting 'em properly if they had, are out hotfoot and hell-bent to get and manage the post office for the rest of us!"

Poor Girl.

"How long have you been married?"

"It will be six months next Thursday."

"And do you still regard your husband as the most wonderful man who ever was born?"

Then the poor girl broke down, says the San Francisco Star, and sobbed piteously. When she could trust herself to speak again she said:

"No. Charles has disappointed me terribly. I'm af-fraid I have wrecked my li-life. Last night when I asked him to get up and see if there wasn't a burglar in our room he bumped his nose against the edge of the open door and he said three simply awful words just as if they came natural to him."

Curious Russian Law.

Russia has a law which to outside observers seems almost to put a premium on theft by which stolen goods become the property of the thief if he can prove that he has had possession of them for over five years. In the thieves' market—which is, of course, licensed by the police—goods that admittedly have been stolen (more than five years before) are openly offered for sale, and the place is a veritable Mecca for the light-fingered gentry and their enterprising friends, as also for the more honest members of society, who secure many a tempting bargain.

BRYAN AND THE SINGLE TERM

Discussing the question of limiting the presidency to a single term, the Philadelphia Press says:

The Democratic national platform declared in favor of a single term in the presidency, and pledged the party to a constitutional amendment to that effect. This has already become a subject of dispute among our Democratic friends. Col. Bryan, who in all probability framed the declaration, contends that it pledges President-elect Wilson to a single term. Mr Wilson has been ominously silent on the subject, but Democrats who are at this time more favorable to him than to Bryan take the position that all the platform does is to pledge the president-elect to a constitutional amendment limiting the tenure to a single term.

In this connection it is well to remember that the platform was not adopted until after Gov. Wilson had been nominated. He undoubtedly was fully acquainted with its contents. As a matter of fact it was submitted to him in advance of its presentation to the convention and it must have met his approval or he would have refused to accept and be bound by it. His silence in regard to this particular plank in the platform is no more "ominous" than his silence regarding other planks which were not in the least prominent in the campaign. He wisely confined his campaign utterances to the questions before the house, devoting himself chiefly to the trusts, the tariff and the privileges so largely responsible for the high cost of living.

Mr Bryan has stood for the single term for the presidency ever since he entered public life. He formally pledged himself to a single term when he was nominated in 1896 and during all the intervening years he has upheld the idea that the public interest is likely to suffer so long as the first term of a president is largely devoted to planning and playing for a second term.

That Mr. Bryan supported the single term proposition at Baltimore for a selfish personal reason we do not in the least believe. Mr Bryan is not plotting for a nomination in 1916. He says he is not a candidate for office and hopes never to be one again. There were exigencies under which he might have been a candidate for a fourth nomination in 1912, but these did not arise. Perhaps there might arise a situation four years hence which would induce him to offer himself once more to the people of the United States. But he is not looking forward to any such contingency nor is he scheming to create an opening for himself in the hope of attaining official power. He is content with the much greater power he is wielding today as the greatest private citizen in the world.

That many of Mr Bryan's friends are looking toward 1916 and are sincerely desirous of seeing him placed once more at the head of his party in its great forward movement is not to be denied. They believe in him profoundly, they trust him implicitly, they are loyal to him in thought, word and deed, and they feel at the bottom of their hearts that he should himself enter into the promised land. But there is not the least reason for believing that Mr Bryan is encouraging them along this line or that he is bending a single effort toward the realization of their dream.—Johnstown Democrat.

THE FIGHT TO COME

The first fight in the new congress is likely to come up over organization. The speakership and the floor leadership in the house are practically settled, Clark and Underwood by common consent continuing in these important positions. But there will be a strong protest in regard to any further recognition of the rule of seniority under which the south now holds practically all the important committee chairmanships and which if continued would leave these chairmanships substantially where they are.

In the new house the north will be represented by a larger number of members from Democratic constituencies than at any time before in many years. Yet if the seniority rule should be respected in organizing the committees the Democrats north of Mason and Dixon's line would remain a negligible quantity.

It is known that Mr. Bryan is opposed to this rule. He was opposed to it when in the sixty-second congress it operated to throw the powerful committees in house and senate into reactionary hands or at least under the control of men not thoroughly in sympathy with democratic Democracy. Mr. Bryan believes the committees should be organized with reference to the fitness of the men composing them and to the ideas for which the members stand.

The real progressives in the party are undoubtedly in the majority and they will not tamely submit to effacement out of respect for a rule more honored in the breach than in the observance. They have in many cases been elected squarely on the progressive issue, they come fresh from a people quickened by a great impulse; they feel upon themselves the obligations of a mission; and they will be loath indeed to accept a situation which ancient custom would impose.

Southern Democrats with some notable exceptions are rather conservative in their leanings. A good many of them are unblushing reactionaries. They neither understand nor sympathize with the new movement in American politics. They are party Democrats rather than democrats in the larger and broader and more fundamental sense. And if left in the full control which they now exercise through their committee positions they will in large measure determine the course of the party during the Wilson administration.

It is believed that President-elect Wilson will see the meaning of the issue which is likely to be raised—which indeed can hardly be avoided—and will throw the weight of his influence with that of Mr Bryan against the rule of seniority and in favor of a reorganization of the committees in house and senate along lines of fitness and with particular reference to the great measures upon which the administration must stand or fall. The newly elected president can be under no illusions as to the temper of the American people at this time. He knows that his was not a party victory in any proper sense. He was chosen by progressives who voted against him not less than by progressives who voted for him. And he can not for one moment or by a single act align himself with the reactionary elements of his party without risking the hold he has on the great body of progressives to which he is so deeply indebted.

Seniority will die hard, but it will die nevertheless. It can no more withstand the march of events than any of the other archaic ideas against which democracy is making successful war. It never had a sound leg to stand on and in its application it has produced effects sometimes grotesque and sometimes almost criminal. We see the grotesque effect in the elevation through seniority of a Penrose to the leadership of his party in the United States senate; and hardly less grotesque is the leadership of Martin on the other side in the same body. Both these men are anachronisms. Neither is in touch with the currents of the time. Neither is capable of discerning the trend of public impulse. Both belong to an era now happily at an end. And yet seniority would keep them in positions of leadership for which they are utterly unfitted through lack of sympathy with and understanding of the forces behind them.

It is earnestly to be hoped that Mr Bryan will attack this evil system with the same vigor and the same unrelenting persistence that he attacked the reactionary forces in the Baltimore convention and that Mr. Wilson in this fight as in that which culminated in his nomination at Baltimore will see the wisdom of standing with the Nebraskan against this relic of bourbonism.

SOME DAY—PERHAPS.

Comment is heard because of the expenditure of so much money in political campaigns, both for the primary and for the election. Candidates have declared themselves as being against the practice. County committeemen have deplored the necessity of spending money in huge amounts. One reason why it is necessary to spend money is that party workers place dollars far above party pride.

What has become of the old-fashioned man who got out and worked in a political campaign solely because he wished to help his party? Is he, like the dodo, extinct? In these halcyon days of 1912 men do not work—most men do not work—because they wish to see their own candidates elected. They work for the $5, $10, $25 or $50 they see in it for themselves. They will not work unless they receive the money—in advance. Some of them take money from the chairman of their own party, then visit the chairman of the opposition party, tell what they have received from the first man, get a still larger amount from the second and sell out. Is there principle in this?

Some day—perhaps—men again will work in a political campaign because of the good they hope they can do their party and not for the pecuniary good they can do themselves. The time may come when they will feel well paid for their labor if they know they have done their best. Just now, however, that time seems part of the far distant future. Men must be paid for spreading the gospel of their own party, for preaching their own doctrines, for aiding their own candidates. Their palms must be crossed with gold before they will take a step forward. This is true of men of all parties. The dollar is higher than principle, higher than party pride, higher than the consciousness of having done good work. And isn't it a sad commentary on the spirit of the times?

THANKSGIVING DAY

When the chilly November breezes
  Have faded the goldenrod,
Comes a day set aside by our Nation
  To render its thanks unto God.
'Tis a great a wonderful country
  This beautiful land of ours,
With its white snow drifts of winter
  And its summers of beautiful flowers.

When the leaves are fallen and broken
  And the bare branches point to the sky,
There's a sense of Heavenly nearness
  We do not feel when summer is by.
'Tis so easy to forget, when all smiling
  The earth, and the skies are tenderest blue,
That the life He gave is still held in his hand,
  And render the thanks that are due.

Then let us render our praises,
  On this day that is set aside,
And ask that the peace and the plenty,
  On our shores may ever abide.
What if the winds will blow colder,
  And life has its storms, by the way
There are many sweet smiles that still greet us,
  And many a sunshiny day.

HONESTLY DEVOTED TO THE SERVICE OF THE PEOPLE
Independent of Selfish Political, Personal or Financial Influences
COURAGEOUS, ENTERPRISING, INTERESTING
ESTABLISHED IN 1824 BY SAMUEL BOWLES
DAILY (morning) $8, SUNDAY $2, WEEKLY $1 a Year

The Springfield Republican stands for political progress and social justice. It has stood for these causes consistently and strongly during the 88 years of its career. It stands also for honesty in all of the relations of life, personal, political, commercial, industrial, national and international. It considers that honesty is an essential basis of real political progress and social justice. It refuses to follow popular leaders who lack this fundamental virtue, however captivating and eloquent.

The Republican has a profound faith in democratic institutions but it recognizes clearly that the safeguard of a progressive democracy is universal education developing an enlightened electorate which may deal justly with the difficult problems that modern civilization presents. It looks forward, through the agency of such an electorate, to an increasing restraint of the aggrandizing activities of powerful individuals and groups, to the end that there may be a juster distribution of the fruits of labor and a fuller realization of the ideal of the commonwealth.

The Republican seeks to embody its principles in its own service to the people as a newspaper. It strives ever to deal with its public honestly in its presentation of the news of the day. It tells no tales to promote its sales. It aims to educate, to enlighten and uplift its readers and yet to interest and entertain them by honest methods. Its editorial page is one of the strongest, keenest, broadest in the country. It deals with all the subjects that concern humanity in the spirit of helpfulness, of healthier, happier living.

The Republican gives a news service that is real, not flashy. It commands the best agencies for its general news, often supplemented by special correspondence. It covers its home territory with remarkable thoroughness, and it devotes large and expert attention to all of the healthy outdoor sports. It gives liberal treatment to literature and to the arts, sciences and industries. The Sunday Republican is especially rich in delightful literary and other diverting features and departments.

MENTOR

The weather this past week has been Indian Summer and no mistake, as it had all the "haziness" that is supposed to go with that sort of a summer and has been so warm that men have been out working in their short-sleeves, and the women have of course been going around bare-headed. Yesterday, however, there was a decided change towards colder weather, with slight flurries of snow in the air.

The old people are still prophesying a mild winter on account of the thinness of the corn-husks, the rather light coats upon horses that have been out all fall, and the light shucks on all the different kinds of nuts that grow in this region.

The pleasant weather has led our people to be less careful than usual at this time of year, and as a consequence there is a general prevalence of colds, and many more people sick than a year ago at this time, with many cases of pneumonia.

Mrs Phoebe Woodford has just returned from spending some time over in Concord, with her two sons, Mr. Will Woodford and Mr. David Woodford and their families.

There was a song service held in the Methodist church last evening which was enjoyed as all such things are, given under the leadership of Mr Ernest Birkholtz of Willoughby, who comes over for all the choir practices, indeed, who feels that he belongs to the Mentor church as his membership is here.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Church are expecting to entertain over Thanksgiving Day their brother, Dr. Albert Church and his family of Lorain.

Mrs George Hicks of Marshall, Indiana, was a guest of her sisters for a portion of last week, and also of her brother, Mr Harry King.

Mr Grant Cowles was called to Madison by the serious illness of his brother living there, and by the death of that brother's wife, who died very suddenly of pneumonia, and left several little children and an aged father. Mr Cowles will remain as long as he seems needed.

Mentor friends of Mr and Mrs Clare Camp hear that they are enjoying life in Cleveland much better than in old Mentor, are attending the Quaker church, and otherwise having better advantages.

Mrs. Florence Northcott is quite sick and under the doctor's care, her place in the "Central" being taken by Miss Frank Sandberg.

Since our village mayor and other members of the Council have rather let up on watching the automobile speeders (as the weather grew cooler) the way some of them tear through the streets is something wonderful, to say the least! Some drivers of machines are quite able to keep up with the trolley cars, even go ahead of them.

The anniversary meeting of the Mentor Miscellany Club was held at the Cowles House on Wednesday evening, where supper was served, and most of the members were present, who with their "better halves" and other invited guests made up the company to about sixty. By request Mrs. T. G. Hart re-read her paper on her trip to California, and Mrs. E. D. Barber brought down the house by her "original poem" on the "County Fair." Mr. Jos. Pinlsted gave some violin music that was very much enjoyed, and other music was furnished by some of the Club members, so that the evening was very delightful indeed.

At the recent "Chrysanthemum" show in Cleveland, it was a matter of great pride that one of our own florists should carry off so many of the prizes from exhibitors in Cleveland and other points in the state. Mr. Carl Hagenburger won a silver cup, which was a double prize, also first prize on violets, second prize on a bridal bouquet (which was made of tiny snowdrop chrysanthemums), and third prize on double red carnations. The Merkle greenhouses are constantly being increased, as their wholesale trade is constantly growing. Just at present, they are putting up an immense block store house to be used especially for winter bulbs.

Miss Margaret Cross of Ashtabula has been a recent guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Will Sawyer, Miss Margaret having been a student at the Catholic school in Nottingham with their daughter, Virginia, last year.

Mr. George Carpenter is at home for a vacation with his mother, Mrs. Ellen Prouty Carpenter, and recently visited his brother Mr. Royal Carpenter at his home in Washington. Mr. Carpenter enjoys his Georgia home and has no desire to return here to live, on account of the cold weather.

Mr. Stephen Lockner was recently married in Willoughby to Miss Cecilia Sllies, the ceremony being performed by the Catholic Father of that place, and the young couple we understand are to make a home here.

The news has crept all 'round the village that a new Telephone Directory was soon to be put out, and there seems to be much rejoicing thereat.

Speaking of Directories Mr. Schaffner is getting one out for the M. E. church here, a something that ought to have been done long ago.

The Home Mission services in Painesville this past week were well attended by people from here, many going out just for the pleasure of hearing Dr. Vincent, others because of interest in missions generally.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry King and daughter, Eleanor, were in Chardon last week, where they made short visits on their cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Randall, Randall Rudesill, and Mrs Ellen Randall Shaw.

Some of our Mentor people who have been guests of Hotel Statler in Buffalo are much interested in the new "Statler" house just recently opened in Cleveland, and were gratified to know that our Miss Carrie Justus has been selected by the Public Library Board, to catalogue the books that are to form the Hotel library.

Mr Paul Woodruff has gone into a wholesale house in Cleveland, but will still keep his Mentor home.

There has been much anxiety expressed by our people about the safety of the Morley girls over in Turkey, since the "unpleasantness" began, and has gradually been creeping nearer and nearer to them every week. Miss Bertha Morley is teaching in a girls school in Constantinople, and is in great danger, of course, nothing having been heard by her brothers here in any weeks, but news coming via the American Board in New York City. Mrs Marsden, nee Miss Lucy Morley is in Adena, in Asiatic Turkey, some three hundred miles from her sister, and in rather a safer place, if any place could be called safe, where the "unspeakable Turk" can ever gain access. So far, they are all right, but no one knows how soon there may be a general massacre of all Christians.

Mrs. Charles Norton has returned from her pleasant trip out to California, where she visited her son, Mr. Byron Norton and his family in Los Angeles, and other friends en route home.

Mr Hugh McCrea is attending school at the Leland Stanford University in California, where he plans taking the engineer's course.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Case have closed their house (recently sold to Mr Jacob Perkins of Cleveland) and will be the guests of their friends, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Sandberg for a short time, before leaving for the east and south. In the east they plan to spend Christmas with their daughter, Miss Frances, who is in a school in Washington, and also visit Mr. Case's sister in the same city, after which they will go to Florida and look over others of the southern states, with a view to locating down there somewhere, we are very sorry to hear.

Mrs. Hart Mynderse of Mentor Plains was up "on the road" calling on a few of her old friends and neighbors on Saturday last.

Mr. John Colville, of Galesburgh, Ill., was a guest over Sunday at "Chesney Wold" the beautiful country home of Mr. and Mrs T. D. Morley in West Mentor.

Mr and Mrs. C. E. Warren of Madison have been recent visitors of Mr George French and his family.

Among our sick people this past week one might mention Mrs Wm Dow, Mrs Ben Warren, and Miss Luella Kerr (who had a slight pull back).

The next entertainment on the Mentor Lecture Course will be given by Mr. John Chambers, an "impersonator" of considerable note on Dec. 21st, the tickets for which are thirty cents.

Mrs Morley's Welcome Class of some twenty-five enthusiastic members hold their last monthly meeting in the Methodist church, but the next will probably be in some private house, as weather becomes colder.

If the death of little Margaret Simona would put a stop to children's catching on behind buggies, wagons, carriages and sleighs, surely her untimely death will not have been in vain. Here in Mentor, this habit of many of the school children, has made them perfect nuisances! We heard one lady say just last week, that she had to stop her horse three different times in driving half a mile, to tell the youngsters to get off from behind her carriage! Even then, sometimes they didn't get off! In our opinion, teachers should be held accountable for the conduct of their pupils when going to and from school. To have a lot of young hoodlums take possession of one's rig often getting into the seats with muddy feet (always uninvited), must be very annoying! We have seen children drop off from coal wagons right in front of speeding automobiles, time and again, and have often wondered why they didn't get hurt. Something ought to be done to stop such a dangerous past time, which really becomes a perfect mania with some children, who put in all their spare time in "catching onto" vehicles of all sorts, kinds and conditions, and who can hardly be driven off with a horse whip.

Declare War on Colds

A crusade of education which aims "that common colds may become uncommon within the next generation" has been begun by prominent New York physicians. Here is a list of the "don'ts" which the doctors say will prevent the annual visitation of the cold:

"Don't sit in a draughty car."

"Don't sleep in hot rooms."

"Don't avoid the fresh air."

To which we would add—when you take a cold get rid of it as quickly as possible. To accomplish that you will find Chamberlain's Cough Remedy most excellent. Sold by all dealers.

SYNOPSIS.

Harding Kent calls on Louise Farrish to propose marriage and finds the house in great excitement over the attempted suicide of her sister Katharine. Kent starts an investigation and finds that Hugh Crandall, suitor for Katharine who had been forbidden the house by General Farrish, had talked with Katharine over the telephone just before she shot herself. A torn piece of yellow paper is found, at sight of which General Farrish is stricken with paralysis. Kent discovers that Crandall has left town hurriedly. Andrew Elser, an aged banker, commits suicide about the same time as Katharine attempted her life. A yellow envelope is found in Elser's room. Post Office Inspector Davis, Kent's friend, takes up the case. Kent is convinced that Crandall is at the bottom of the mystery. Katharine's strange outcry puzzles the detectives. Kent and Davis search Crandall's room and find an address, Lock Box 17, Ardway, N. J. Kent goes to Ardway to investigate and becomes suspicious of a "Henry Cook." A woman commits suicide at the Ardway Hotel. A yellow letter also figures in this case. Kent calls Louise on the long distance telephone and finds that she had just been called by Crandall from the same booth. "Cook" disappears. The Ardway postmaster is missing. Inspector Davis arrives at Ardway and takes up the investigation. He discovers that the dead woman is Sarah Sacket of Bridgeport. Louise telephones Kent imploring him to drop the investigation. Kent returns to New York to get an explanation from Louise. He finds the body of a woman in Central Park and more yellow letters. He sees Crandall, whom he recognizes as "Cook," enter the Farrish home. Louise again implores Kent to drop the investigation and refuses to give any explanation. Later Kent sees Crandall and Louise in an automobile. Kent returns to Ardway. Davis announces that he has planned to arrest the missing postmaster and also the master criminal.

"Wait a minute," said Davis, and the constable checked the horse.

Jumping out quickly the inspector seized the lantern and dropping back a few paces began making what appeared to be a minute examination of the road.

"'Taint much of a road," the constable whispered to me while we waited. "It's only used for logging, though when we come up here this afternoon there was automobile tracks both going and coming."

"Any idea who made them?" I asked.

"Nope, but I guess he knows," with a gesture in the direction of the lantern light.

Just then Davis rejoined us, hanging the lantern over the dashboard again. Instead of resuming his seat he knelt on the floor of the buckboard, peering down at the road as it was dimly revealed by the lantern.

"Go ahead slowly," he ordered.

As Dodds clucked to the horse I leaned down beside Davis and asked:

"What did you find?"

"Just what I expected. The automobile is somewhere ahead of us."

"Whose is it?"

"I don't know yet."

My curiosity would be denied no longer. Hitherto I had kept silent, hoping that Davis would confide in me the object of our strange journey.

"Whom are we coming out here after?" I asked.

"The postmaster and his accomplice, of course."

"Who is his accomplice?"

"I'm afraid I misstated the case," said Davis with a grim chuckle. "The postmaster is the accomplice. The other is the master criminal."

"Who is the other?" I persisted. "Is it Hugh Crandall?"

He was silent for a moment before answering. I attributed it to hesitation in admitting that he had been wrong and I right, and it was with considerable satisfaction that I finally heard him answer: "I should not be surprised if we found Crandall somewhere in the vicinity."

He continued to peer down into the road as the horse struggled up the hill till we came to a comparatively level plateau.

"Stop here," he called out authoritatively.

"We'll walk it," said Davis. "We cannot take any chances of the wheels being heard."

Dodds pulled off the road and fastened the horse to a tree. Again taking the lantern Davis made a search of the road, finally returning the lantern to its place, after carefully extinguishing it.

"Come on this way, as quietly as you can," he directed.

"I've got this," I said, showing him the little pocket electric light with which I had explored the post office. "Do you want it?"

"Keep it in your pocket. We may need it, but it is better not to show a light if we can avoid it."

I put it back in my pocket and took the precaution of placing the revolver Davis had given me in the side pocket of my coat where it would be more easily available. Davis moved off soundlessly through the clearing with the constable close at his heels.

"This ain't the direction of the cottage," whispered Dodds.

"I know. I want to find something else first," Davis explained, keeping straight on through the darkness, like a hound on a fresh scent.

He moved rapidly forward for a hundred and fifty yards and then brought us up short with a sharp "Hist." As we strained our eyes into blackness we made out the shape of an automobile just ahead. Its lights had been extinguished and its engine was dead.

"Wait here," Davis again commanded as he crept silently toward it to make sure that the tonneau was unoccupied. He was back with us in a minute.

"Let me have that lamp of yours, Kent," he whispered, at the same time lighting a cigarette.

"Is that safe?" I exclaimed in surprise, amazed that he would dare to smoke when he had been taking such precautions against our being discovered.

"Sure," he replied laconically. "Whoever was in that automobile is at least half a mile away by now. The glass on the front lamps is nearly cold. I want to see the number, though. We may find it useful."

Taking my little electric lamp he advanced toward the machine again, flashing the light for a second on the number, and then peering by its light into the tonneau, exclaiming as he straightened up: "I thought so."

If it was safe for him to smoke, the constable and I felt that it was safe for us, too, to relax our precautions, and together we had advanced until we were beside him.

"What did you find?" I asked, wondering at his exclamation.

"What I expected," he replied enigmatically.

The manner of his answer provoked me and I determined then and there to have it out with him.

"Look here, Davis," I said; "I brought you into this case and I do not like the way you have acted about it. I have freely told you everything I have discovered and have aided you in every way I can. Before I go a step farther on this trip I want to know more about it."

"What is it you wish to know?" he asked. The constable edged nearer for fear he might miss something of our conversation.

"First, where are we going?"

"To what is known as the deserted cottage, about a half mile farther on, at the edge of this clearing, a shack that was built for a shelter for lumbermen or quarrymen—which was it, Dodds?"

"Built for one and used by t'other," the constable replied, "but tain't been used by either, so far as I know, for a dozen years."

"How do you know the missing postmaster is there?"

"Traced him."

"How?"

"Bicycle tracks," he answered with a chuckle. "You were not the only person who discovered that Rouser, when he disappeared, went on bicycle. In fact, Kent, you are a little slow as a detective. By the time you had ascertained that much, I ascertained where the bicycle tracks led to and had even gone so far as to have Dodds get warrants for Rouser and his accomplice."

"I still do not see how you got evidence enough to get a warrant for Crandall. Did you find him out here with the missing postmaster?"

"I didn't say I had a warrant for Crandall," replied the inspector sharply. "Did you ever hear of a John Doe warrant?"

"How do you know they are out here now?" I asked.

"We'll soon find out. Come on," he answered, starting across the clearing almost at a dog trot.

There were many more questions I wanted to put to him, but there was no opportunity, and, besides, I doubted much if he would have answered them. At first he made little effort to move quietly, but after we had gone a quarter of a mile or more he called back in a whisper, "Quietly now."

We had come to a path which led us through a short thick growth of underbrush. As noiselessly as Indians following a trail we felt our way along, the silence broken now and then by the sound of a bough bent back, or a rustling leaf. Soon the path brought us out on some rising ground. Not fifty yards ahead of us appeared the deserted cottage.

"That's it," whispered Dodds.

"Ssh!" answered Davis. "Wait here!"

We stopped there just at the edge of the underbrush, peering into the darkness, straining our eyes to see and our ears to hear. From the one window in the side of the one-story log hut a dim light shone, proving that the place was either occupied or had been very recently. As we became more and more accustomed to the darkness I could see that there were apparently two paths, the one on which we were standing and another leading off at about right angle.

As we looked and listened I heard a sharp crack, like the breaking of a twig that had been stepped on.

The sound, so far as I could judge, came from the other path, apparently a hundred feet away from the cottage. I turned toward Davis and saw that he, too, had heard it. He was standing with his whole body tense, his head bent forward a little as if ready to spring at any instant.

As we listened, another sound came to our ears. At first indistinct, it quickly took the rhythm of footsteps hurrying along the path, a man walking rapidly, I decided. The hurrying footsteps came nearer and nearer. Davis now was crouching like a runner about to make a hundred yard dash.

It was only a minute of suspense and yet the effect on my nerves was indescribable. I wanted to scream like a hysterical girl, I wanted to run, forward or back, it made no difference; I wanted to do something, anything—anything but stand there and wait in the darkness.

All of a sudden the form of a man hurrying along the other path became visible. He seemed to be carrying something. Davis took two or three noiseless steps forward and stopped abruptly. From the shadows, from nowhere it seemed, the figure of another man appeared directly in the path of the oncomer.

"Hold on here!" it said, or something like that.

With a curse the first man dropped whatever he was carrying and started to run. The second man started after him. With not more than ten paces between them the pursued man suddenly wheeled. A revolver flashed and the pursuer with a muttered curse fell headlong in the path. The hunted man turned and, with headlong speed, plunged down the path.

At the revolver shot Davis had leaped forward, and, needless to say, Dodds and I were not far behind him. Fast as the fugitive was vanishing Davis was even faster. With the movement of a trained runner he, the wiry inspector, quickly outdistanced Dodds and myself and was close on the heels of his man.

As I ran breathless behind him, hoping to arrive in time to help him in his capture, I saw the man ahead halt and turn. Instinctively I knew he was about to shoot again, and, raising the revolver I had been carrying all the while, without even trying to aim, I fired in his direction just as I saw the flash from his revolver.

There was hardly a second between the two reports and then—

A woman shrieked.

I turned sick with horror. There could be no mistaking it.

It was the voice of Louise Farrish.

With overwhelming dismay it came to me that I had shot the woman I loved. Too stunned to move I stood there. My whole body seemed turned to stone. My arms hung helpless at my sides. My legs refused to move. My mouth was fever-dry and my tongue lay lifeless. Yet my vision, I recall, seemed clear and strong, penetrating the darkness as if it had been broad day. I seemed to see, as if the sight belonged to some one else, some one outside myself. I saw the inspector and constable, both apparently unhurt by the shots, dash on in pursuit. I saw a man's figure rise up from the path. I seemed to hear him call out: "Louise, Louise, where are you? Are you hurt?"

There was no answer. Almost I had persuaded myself that the strain on my nerves, the horror of the night and the shock of the shooting had given me a hallucination, that the woman's shriek I had heard was but a phantasm of a fevered brain, when the figure I had seen rise from the path, dashed into the thicket, repeating its agonized cry of "Louise, Louise, where are you?"

At the sound, life came again into me. I dashed my revolver to the ground and sprang after him. I found him bending over an unconscious form on the ground. Just as I reached the spot he had lighted a match. He lifted it to see my face, and as he did so I saw that the woman lying there apparently lifeless was indeed my Louise.

Overwhelmed with anguish and remorse I flung myself beside her, entreating her forgiveness. The other man shoved me roughly aside, cried angrily, "Help me carry her over there by the window."

Together we lifted her and bore her gently to the side of the cottage, where we laid her on the ground. Joy surged in my heart as I saw and heard that she was still breathing, joy that was not even abated when I saw by the window light that my companion was none other than Hugh Crandall.

But just then all other thoughts were driven out of my head by the sight of a thin stream of blood trickling down the sleeve of Louise's automobile coat.

"I tell you she is shot. See," I cried, all my anguish coming back anew.

With trembling hands I helped Crandall cut away her sleeve, dreading all the time to see and know the worst.

"It's only a scratch," said Crandall, with a sigh of relief.

Across her rounded arm was a reddening gash where the bullet had cut its way through the tender flesh. While my head told me that Crandall was right, that it was only a flesh wound and not in the least dangerous, in my heart I still felt little better than a murderer. Three inches to the right, and the bullet from my revolver would have stilled her heart for ever.

She opened her eyes and stared at us in a puzzled way.

"Why, Harding, dear," she said in feeble surprise, "are you here—here with Mr. Crandall?"

For answer I bent and kissed her. What mattered it if Hugh Crandall was the criminal? What mattered it if the chain of mystery was still unsolved? What mattered it if the author of the yellow letters had escaped from the inspector? Louise lived! She loved me!

Davis and the constable came running up the path, panting from their chase, but empty-handed.

"Is she hurt?" asked Davis as he saw the three of us grouped under the window.

"A flesh wound, not at all dangerous," Crandall answered, while I knelt there caressing Louise's hair and whispering softly to her.

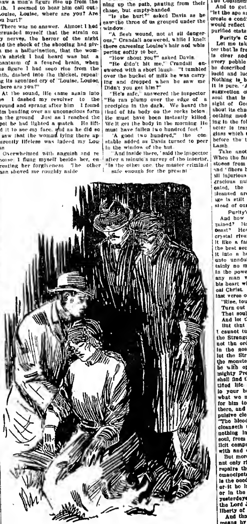
"How about you?" asked Davis.

"He didn't hit me," Crandall answered with a short laugh. "I tumbled over the bucket of milk he was carrying and dropped when he saw me. Didn't you get him?"

"He's safe," answered the inspector. "He ran plump over the edge of a precipice in the dark. We heard the thud of his body on the rocks below. He must have been instantly killed. We'll get the body in the morning. He must have fallen two hundred feet."

"A good two hundred," the constable added as Davis turned to peer in the window of the hut.

"And inside there," said the inspector after a minute's survey of the interior, "is the other one, the master criminal, safe enough for the present."



"A Flesh Wound, Not at All Dangerous," Crandall Answered.

"Don't be a fool," he exclaimed. "She has only fainted."

"She's shot! She's killed!" I cried. "I shot her!"

"I tell you she has only fainted," he

"Why," said the constable, who had followed the inspector's example in looking through the window, "why, that's Alork Young."

Sleds Used in the Yukon

Not Constructed Along Lines of Beauty, but for Hard Work They Are Perfection.

The Yukon sled, while not a thing of beauty, is built to stand all kinds of hard wear, or, as the Irishman said, "It will last forever, and after that can be used for firewood." The sled is about eight feet long, is made of any kind of hard wood, lies close to the ground, costs from $10 to $14, and makes a trail sixteen inches in width. Another pattern is known as the basket sleigh, and it is to the Yukon sleigh what a three-masted schooner is to a coal barge. In length it is from eight to fifteen feet, is made of birch, oak or hickory, cuts a trail twenty-two inches in width, costs from $40 to $200, is raised a foot or more from the runners, and, in the best examples, is lashed together with rawhide. The basket sleigh, as its name implies, is fitted with a basket, into which the load is placed, and, from the back of the basket a pair of handles project, to be used in guiding the sled on the trail. It often happens that a Yukon sled will be fitted with a home-made basket, in imitation of its more aristocratic brother. In very cold weather wooden runners are best, but in ordinary circumstances steel or brass runners are used.—Wide World Magazine.

Named for General Wadsworth.

Fort Wadsworth in New York harbor is not named for Capt. Joseph Wadsworth, but for Gen. James Samuel Wadsworth of Geneseo, N. Y. General Wadsworth raised a regiment when the Civil war broke out, served with distinction, and was killed in the battle of the Wilderness. In his memory the name of Fort Tompkins was changed to Fort Wadsworth.

"George," she said sweetly, "I'm almost through housecleaning. But I'm up against a terrible problem now."

"What's the matter?"

THE QUIET HOUR

UPROOT EVIL TO PURIFY THE HEART

WHAT is the significance of this purity which is the condition of the most radiant beatitude? Perhaps if we seek analogies in nature, and see the use of the word in some remote relationships, it may help us to clarify our conception of what a life is like that is pure in the sight of God. Here then is a land that has been purged of monsters. The beast has been driven out. We have a vivid description of the emancipation of one of the earlier "Idylls of the King." The beasts would creep down to the homesteads and steal and destroy. They were a perpetual menace to quiet living. A crusade was appointed for the destruction of the destroyer, and the land was cleared of its foes. Now such an area, rid of the masterful beast, was a purified realm. And surely in the fields of the soul there are beasts of prey. There is the lion of passion, the serpent of envy, the bear of boorishness, the fox of deceit, and many others which find their home and their sustenance in the holy place, writes Dr. J. H. Jowett in The Continent.

And to get rid of these beasts, to "let the ape and tiger die," would be to create a condition in human life which would reflect one characteristic of the purified state.

Purity's Crystal Transparency.

Let me take another analogy. Water that is free from all sediment, that is clear and transparent, reflecting every pebble on the river bed, could be described as pure. Everything is lucid and lucent. Nothing is shady. Nothing is hiding in a muddy cloud. It is pure. And here, too, I may find suggestion of the purified life. The soul that is clean and clear in the sight of God has nothing dubious about its character, nothing shady and nothing muddy, there is nothing hiding in the folds of duplicity. The character is transparent like the sea of glass which the great seer gazed upon before the throne of God and the Lamb.

Take another usage of the word. When the farmer has gathered out the stones from a field, when dead roots and fibers have been removed, when all injurious growths that absorb the gracious nutriment have been extirpated, the farmer describes the cleansed area as "clean." The usage is still prevalent in every farmstead of our country.

Purity's Potent Champion.

And how is a heart like this to be gained? How can we drive out the beast? How can we make it like the crystal river? How can we cleanse it like a farmstead that is ready for the best seed? How can we transform it into a home of truth that is like unto unadulterated gold? Most certainly no man can effect this change in the power of his own will. I pity any man who sets about to purify his heart without the help of the eternal Christ. There is an old hymn, the last verse of which runs as follows:

"Rise, touched with gratitude divine,
Turn out his enemy and thine,
That soul destroying monster, sin,
And let the heavenly Stranger in."

But that is just what I cannot do. I cannot turn the monster out and let the Stranger in. And indeed that is not the order of things which I find in the gospel. The gospel is this: let the Stranger in and he will turn the monster out! Our concern is to be with opening the door to the mighty Presence in whose power we shall find the secret of pure and sanctified life. "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith." That is what we need—to get the Christ in, for him to make his dwelling place there, and for him to do his own expulsive cleansing and purifying work. "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." There is nothing in the whole realm of the soul, from a beast of passion to an illicit compromise, that he cannot deal with and expel.

But more than that. The Lord Jesus not only rids us of a tyrant. He also repairs the damage. He not only emancipates, he beautifies. Whatever is the need of the human spirit, whether it be in the tyranny of actual sin or in the grip of guilt, bound to its yesterdays or in servitude to today, the Lord Jesus can give "the glorious liberty of the children of God."

And thus it is that he provides the means by which we may realize the fruits of his own beatitude. In the Lord Jesus is to be found all the dynamic of cleansing. Our hearts are purified by faith. Faith enters into vital fellowship with the Christ, and the energies of his life and sacrifice are imparted to our souls, and "we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

With Zeal and Cheerfulness.

Let us each cultivate carefully and joyfully the portion of soil Providence has committed to our care. Let us never be hindered or distracted by ambitious thoughts that we could do better, or a false zeal tempting us to forsake our daily task with the vain desire to surpass our neighbors. Let this one thought occupy our minds: To do well what is given to us to do, for this is all that God requires at our hands. It may be summed up in four words: simply—zealously—cheerfully—completely.—Gold Dust, edited by Charlotte Yonge.

The Good Shepherd.

"The Lord is thy keeper."—Ps. cxxi. 5. We may lie down in peace, and sleep in safety, because the Shepherd of Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps. No foe or thing of evil can ever surprise our ever-watchful Guardian, or overcome our Almighty Deliverer. He has once laid down his life for the sheep; but now he ever liveth to care for them, and to insure to them all that is needful for this life and for that which is to come.—Rev. J. M. Taylor.

Worth Three Times a Diamond.

Nearly all the emeralds mined today come from Colombia. And, in spite of the supposed higher value of diamonds, the emerald is the most precious of gems. Carat for carat, a flawless emerald would bring perhaps three times the price of a flawless diamond in the jewelry market. India, the storehouse of precious stones, is credited with producing the first emeralds, but the Oriental emerald is not identical with the modern gem, as it is a variety of the ruby, of green color and extremely rare.

Suicide Among German Children.

Why do so many German children commit suicide? No one seems to know, but there is no dispute about the fact. Indeed it has been said that the majority of suicides are those of children, and experts seem inclined to connect the grisly epidemic with the educational system. That "the weak must go to the wall" has become an axiom that has been extended to the schools, and the undeveloped mind of the child seeks relief in suicide from the discouragement of failure. It would be interesting to know if any of the so-called heathen countries of the world have ever experienced such a horrid social phenomena as that of child suicide.

A FRIEND'S ADVICE
Something Worth Listening To.

A young Nebr. man was advised by a friend to eat Grape-Nuts because he was all run down from a spell of fever. He tells the story:

"Last spring I had an attack of fever that left me in a very weak condition. I had to quit work; had no appetite, was nervous and discouraged.

"A friend advised me to eat Grape-Nuts, but I paid no attention to him and kept getting worse as time went by.

"I took many kinds of medicine but none of them seemed to help me. My system was completely run down, my blood got out of order from want of proper food, and several very large boils broke out on my neck. I was so weak I could hardly walk.

"One day mother ordered some Grape-Nuts and induced me to eat some. I felt better and that night rested fine. As I continued to use the food every day, I grew stronger steadily and now have regained my former good health. I would not be without Grape-Nuts, as I believe it is the most health-giving food in the world."

RIGHT CARE OF TEETH

MOST HIGHLY DESIRABLE POINT OF BEAUTY.

Increasing Daily Attention and Conscientious Visits to the Dentist Are Imperative if Good Looks Are to Be Preserved.

A good, firm white set of teeth is more to be desired than a rare string of pearls. Unfortunately, all cannot possess good teeth, but the few women who have a perfectly good white set of teeth should guard them as they would the finest jewels. On good authority, it may be stated that a bad stomach causes bad teeth, and if the stomach is not kept in good condition, no matter how strong the teeth may be, they cannot last.

Germs develop and live almost everywhere. When there is one bad tooth in the mouth, there is certain to be germs. One bad tooth not taken care of in time may lead to many visits to the dentist and possibly the loss of one or more teeth.

Some years back the dentist would be visited once a year, later on twice a year was considered sufficient, but now four times or every three months is deemed none too often to have the dentist look your teeth over. There may be a tiny cavity, so small, in fact, that it is revealed only when the dentist looks through his magnifying glass. But that cavity attended to in time will involve small cost, little pain, and result in the preservation of the tooth. Sometimes the dentist's examination may fail to reveal a small cavity way down near a root and if you yourself do not find it soon it will mean a good-sized filling when you next visit the dentist. Therefore, if longer than three months is allowed to elapse between the visits to the dentist it is easy to estimate the damage that may result to your teeth.

Much has been written and said concerning the care of the teeth, and in many instances the statements are extreme. One of them—that the condition of the teeth depends wholly on the care given them—is arbitrary and untrue. As a matter of cleanliness and a means of aiding the preservation and enhancing the beauty of the teeth, unceasing daily attention should be bestowed upon them, but even under these ministrations teeth will decay, lose their color and become useless, and it is not unusual to see rows of strong, white, sound-looking teeth that have never known brush or dentifrice.

Unsound teeth are due to constitutional defects, unless the teeth have been abused by being made to serve as nut-crackers or having some equally abnormal task forced upon them. Their color, too, if dark, may result from the use of iron as a medicine, or from an acid condition of the stomach, and all brushing, cleaning and polishing that may be given them will not restore them to their original whiteness.

There are also teeth which are of a waxen white or yellow ivory tint. The former have pearly, transparent edges, indicating a delicate constitution and like it are frail and doomed soon to decay. The latter are strong and generally belong to a person of vigorous constitution, but no amount of brushing or scouring will ever bleach them to whiteness that is not natural to them.

It is claimed by some that sweets are injurious to the teeth. Pure cane sugar candy or maple sugar will not corrode the teeth, even if one partake plenteously of these sweets. The teeth need work and exercise, and, if properly used and not abused, whatever is good for the stomach and can be properly digested will not harm the teeth.

The real harm is done when crumbs are left in the teeth, especially over night. Then acid accumulates and slowly eats the enamel, and once this occurs there will soon be a cavity.

Never use a toothpick of any kind. For removing the crumbs between the teeth dental floss is better. It should be drawn between the teeth after eating and always before retiring at night. It is not necessary to use powder every day, but it is necessary to brush the teeth morning and night with tepid water to which a pinch or two of borax has been added. This sweetens the breath and keeps the teeth clean. Two or three times a week brush them with powder, and once a month give them a general cleaning with pulverized pumice, rinsing the teeth thoroughly afterward.

A cleansing and refreshing tooth powder may be made with the following ingredients:

Equal parts of precipitated chalk, powdered orris root, borax and powdered castile soap. Weigh these ingredients, and, if a half pound or more, five cents worth of oil of wintergreen may be added. Then sift all through several times. When not using, keep closely covered.

If the practice of rinsing the teeth and mouth after eating were more generally observed, the teeth would last longer and dentists' bills would be fewer. Pour a pint of boiling water over a tablespoonful of bicarbonate of soda. When cool it may be used to rinse the teeth, as this destroys the accumulation of acid. Larger proportions may be mixed and kept handy for use. It takes but a moment to rinse the teeth, and this precaution helps in a large measure to preserve them.

Ostrich Plumes.

Ostrich plumes, like lace, are never allowed to remain in the background for any length of time, and an early return to favor is predicted for them as the season advances. The smaller hat shapes of satin and plush are so chic in form and fabric that they really require but little trimming of any kind. The "Berets" of velvet are very becoming, and real Tam o' Shanter shapes in the same fabric denote a tendency to return to the styles of 1885.

New Scarfs Attractive.

Some of the new scarfs are quite attractive. One model is in all black silk with longish black tassels. Others are black, with a gay lining of plaid or striped silk.

Social Forms and Entertainments

A Budget of Queries.

Would like to know in the next issue, if possible, if it is proper to acknowledge an invitation (if one intends going) to a luncheon, when invitation is on ordinary calling card. Also when invitation is formal. Is it proper to call after a reception or luncheon and should one leave cards? Is it proper to acknowledge an invitation to an "at home," and if so, how should it be worded? Also, is it proper at a home wedding to take place at six o'clock for a bride to wear a dress with a train without a long veil?—Jeanne.

Every invitation where the hostess provides a luncheon, dinner or supper should be acknowledged at once, or else how is she to know for how many to prepare? My theory is that every invitation should be accepted or regretted just as soon as possible. In the strict sense of the word and according to the old-fashioned rules of etiquette, calls should be made after accepting hospitality, but in this busy generation and on account of the great distances in cities one overlooks the fact that guests do not pay party calls, for it is almost impossible. A bride may decide for herself exactly the costume she wishes to be married in, and a short gown minus veil and train is proper if it best suits her plans, her purse and her convenience.

Concerning a Shower.

Am giving a shower for a girl friend of mine and would like if you would give me a few suggestions. Do not wish to play cards, but would like to do other things. I thought for one thing I might have each guest hem a towel, and to the one doing it the neatest and quickest give a little prize of some kind. Would that be suitable?

The colors are to be yellow and white. How could I best carry them out? What would be nice for the luncheon?—Anna.

For your decorations all you will need is yellow and white chrysanthemums and carry out the scheme a bit in your menu by having a cream of celery soup with the grated yolk of hard-boiled eggs sprinkled over a spoonful of whipped cream, serve in bouillon cups, fried chicken breasts, sweet potato croquettes, corn fritters, pineapple salad, cheese crackers and New York ice cream with sunshine and angel food cake. The towel idea is a good one, and you could give the towel for the prize.

Concerning a Wedding.

I am to have a morning wedding with about thirty guests; may I ask several questions, and will you please help me plan for it? Are invitations sent where only the relatives in the same town are invited? Do the bride and groom stand facing the guests? Is the double ring ceremony becoming more popular?—W. J.

Indeed, you may ask just all the questions you wish. I am right here to answer them to the best of my ability. For a simple home wedding you need not send engraved invitations, but just little notes or ask the relatives and guests yourself to witness the ceremony. The double ring ceremony is quite popular, but it and the question of whether you stand facing the guests or with your back to them is just for you to decide and the clergyman who is to officiate usually has some preference to express which he will do at rehearsal.

Reply to Teddy Smith.

Perhaps if you put it just right your boy friend will offer to send you his college pennant if you tell him you are getting a collection.

Just watch the department between now and the holidays and see if you find just what you want for your party. I put all the new ideas in the paper just as soon as I get them. I am sorry you cannot dance, it is such splendid exercise as well as amusement.

If your sister does not object I do not see why should not go out occasionally with her husband, but I would not go very often, unless "she" went, too.

It all depends upon how much you think of the boy, whether you give him your picture or not. I do not think I would. Your last two questions regarding "date" and making your hair light I cannot answer.

Questions of Precedence.

It is the man's place to proceed ahead of the lady he is with when going through a crowd, in going through a door, in getting off of a street car or railway train, in going upstairs and down an aisle.

Country Girl's Answer.

It is perfectly proper to ask a young man to call again if you really would like him to do so. There probably would be no harm in going motoring alone, but I do not think it wise. Eighteen-year-old girls can not be too careful of what they do, and how, and when, and with whom. It may seem a bit prudish but I assure you I do not mean it so.

Reply to "Anxious."

I do not think girls your age need make a "curtsey." It is very pretty for the younger girls and is taught in dancing school. I think your hair down your back for a couple of years yet, is best.

MADAME MERRI.

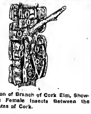
ANOTHER DESTRUCTIVE INSECT PEST HAS MADE ITS WAY INTO THIS COUNTRY

Geoffroy, Injurious Insect Little Known Here, but Well Known in Europe, Causing Serious Damage to Elms in Various Parts of the United States.

(By F. B. HILLMAN.)

Geoffroy, an insect little known in this country, but well known in Europe, where it is a serious enemy of the elms in France, is causing considerable damage in various parts of the United States. The first locality in our country in which this insect was found was Westchester county, N. Y., in 1884, where it was found on nursery stock in great numbers.

In 1887 it was found on the slippery elm at Cambridge, Mass. It had been observed in New York city the previous year. In 1888 it was found on elms on the grounds of the Department of Agriculture at Washington, and soon after on trees in the streets of the same city. Up to this time the insect remained unidentified in the American entomological collections, but in 1889 more complete material was received by the Division of Entomology of the department of agriculture, from which the insect was determined to be identical with the elm pest of Europe (Gossyparia ulmi) Geoffroy.



Section of Branch of Cork Elm, Showing Female Insects Between the Plates of Cork.

So far as is known the insect confines its attacks in this country to the elms, but presents some variability in its preferences for the various species of elms in different localities. In Europe, however, it has been found on the alder.

According to the reports of the observers at the above mentioned localities, the insect attacks the American elms more vigorously than the introduced European species, and thus it is added to the already long list of immigrant animals and plants that have found in this country conditions more congenial than those of their foreign home.

One is most apt to first notice the presence of this insect by seeing great numbers of circular whitish rings surrounding a dark center clustered along the under side of the lower limbs and branches. If the bark is cracked, rows of the insects will be found to cover the cracks and so be arranged longitudinally to the branch. These light margined objects are the bodies of old female lice and may be one, two or three years' standing. A closer examination will reveal the fact that many of the central darker parts, which are the bodies proper of the lice, are absent, these having fallen away with age.

The white marginal ring surrounding the body of the insect, consists of a somewhat fibrous, waxy material, secreted by the developing insect. It becomes firmly attached to the bark and curled inward, where its edge is somewhat fringed. The body becomes with age dark brown, smooth, convex longitudinally, the segmentation usually remaining distinct.

The preceding description applies to the female only. The male insect assumes a very different form. As the males do not take food, they may be found at any point on the bark, usually, however, in more or less protecting spots. On nearing maturity, the males secrete a minute pocket-like case, or cocoon, within which they cast their larval skin, and acquire a single pair of wings. They then emerge from the cocoon, and mating with the females, disappear. The empty cocoons remain attached to the bark. They occur singly, but usually in clusters, each a minute white object less than a twelfth of an inch long. Where the plates of cork are numerous on the branches of the cork elm, the female lice become fixed to the narrow strips of living bark between the plates of cork, while the male cocoons may be found in the narrow crevices in the cork.

The young lice, as they appear at this season, can be seen with the unaided eye only on close examination. Under a strong lens, a cluster of them presents a dull grayish appearance. Individually they are somewhat oval in shape, and are covered with minute whitish spines. Most of them are quiet in their place of hibernation, but on being disturbed many will leave their positions, moving sluggishly.

The destruction of this insect should not be attended with the difficulty that has characterized efforts in this direction against the San Jose and other scale-insects. The latter are protected by a roof-like scale which protects the tender parts of the body and enables the insects to very effectually resist the remedies ordinarily employed. In the case of the elm insect, the body remains exposed and thus is more likely to yield to the action of corrosive washes.

Kerosene emulsion and whale-oil soap seem to be effectual remedies when the insects are reached by them. Spraying will have to be done at different periods and may be found to be most effectual when the insects are most active.

The fumes of hydro-cyanic acid gas effectually destroy the lice, but the use of the remedy necessitates the employment of a tent to cover the tree and confine the gas sufficiently long to kill the insects.

A careful study of the insect's habits, extending through an entire year at least, will be necessary to determine the most vulnerable period in the insect's life-history.

Grow Tomatoes.

If you grow only an acre or two of tomatoes the fruits saved from one large, vigorous plant will produce more than enough seed for your whole plantation next year. Is it not worth while, therefore, to consider this matter? Have you not found one or more plants in your field which are especially valuable because of their large production of fine tomatoes? Try this plan of saving your own seed and note results.

Geese and Their Feathers.

It requires about four geese to make a pound of feathers. Picking live geese for their feathers is a practice that has been discontinued in this country.

DETAILS OF THE CONNECTICUT TRAP NEST

The Connecticut trap nest perfected by Prof. F. H. Stoneburn of the agricultural college is a simple and easily made device, and is said to work every time a hen enters it. Any box of about 15 inches square will answer the purpose, orange boxes being available. The dimensions shown in the cut can be varied, except for the trigger. The advantage of having a wire-covered door is that the hen will stay in front of the box after she has laid. These nests can be built in pairs or tiers, as liberating the hen, gathering the egg, and setting the trigger are all done from the front end.

A Satisfactory Dip for Hogs.

The Oklahoma experiment station has found that a most effective and inexpensive dipping device was found in a wallowing vat placed so as to be constantly accessible to the hogs. This vat had a depth of about 14 inches and was kept constantly filled with water, being cleaned occasionally and carrying on the surface a gallon or more of crude oil. It was found that the hogs kept themselves free from lice by voluntary immersion in this vat.

Cold-Storage Eggs.

The cold-storage egg will no longer masquerade as "strictly fresh" in New York state grocery stores. The legislature has passed a law compelling the grocers to post a sign in full view, ten inches long and six inches high, on every box or basket of cold-storage poultry, fish and eggs, the sign containing these words: "Cold Storage." The letters must not be less than two inches in height. This law will help the producer and seller of fresh eggs and poultry.

BOSTON CHILD KEPT DIGNITY

Matron Meant to Be Kindly, But Youngster Was Not Conversationally Inclined.

This story has been going the rounds of Boston about the ten-year-old son of Director Russell of the Boston opera house.

One evening during an entr'acte at the opera house Master Russell was promenading alone in the foyer, in faultlessly evening dress—a very glass of fashion. A Boston matron, seeing that he was lonely, began to make herself "agreeable."

"You are Director Russell's little boy, aren't you?" she asked, with patronizing sweetness.

Master Russell resented this intrusion on his dignity, but his courtly manners were unruffled. "Yes, madam," he replied, with an elaborate bow.

"Where were you born?"

"In France, madam"—slightly more frigid.

"What part?" continued the lady, feeling the conversation well started.

"All of me, madam."

And he bowed and walked away.—Judge.

HANDS BURNING, ITCHING

905 Lowell Place, Chicago, Ill.—"The trouble began by my hands burning and itching and I rubbed and scratched them till one day I saw little red sores coming out. My hands were disfigured and swollen, and troubled me so that I could not sleep. They were cracked and when the small sores broke a white matter would come out. I could not do any hard work, if I did the sores would come out worse. For two years nobody could cure my eczema, until one day I thought I would try the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used warm water with the Cuticura Soap and after that I put the Cuticura Ointment on my hands twice a day for about five or six months when I was cured." (Signed) Sam Marcus, Nov. 26, 1911.

TRY, TRY AGAIN.

She—And why are you afraid to ask papa?

He—Well, I've asked him for three of your sisters already.

Why He Wept.

At a reception one night, says the Woman's Home Companion, a loud-voiced young man was invited to sing. Desultory applause followed, and he responded with a vociferous rendering of "My Old Kentucky Home." The hostess was passing among her guests, beaming at the success of her entertainment and sure that everybody was having a good time, when suddenly, to her surprise, she came upon a middle-aged man but slightly known to her, who was weeping silently, but bitterly in a secluded corner. Thinking that his heart had been touched by the old song, she asked sympathetically:

"Why do you weep? Are you a Kentuckian?"

"No, madam," he replied. "I am a musician."

Frontier Medical List.

In good old frontier days castor oil was the principal medical beverage—good full measure, too. Only the biggest person could hold a whole dose—one-half a dipperful, with half a dipperful of New Orleans molasses added to help slick it down and make it taste good, only it didn't taste good. In those historic days every old woman was a doctor and gathered her own "yarbs" in the woods, and knew how to mix up medical messes that would stir the vitals of a brass monkey or a cast iron pig. All backwoodsmen believed in "yarb" doctors. Something in "yarbs," at that.

Education and Larger Life.

It seems to me that the woman who cannot cut out a garment better because of her geometry and her drawing lessons, who cannot speak English more distinctly and with fuller vocabulary because of her study of French or German, who cannot find a hundred uses for her chemistry in the little everyday emergencies of her housekeeping, has not succeeded in getting from her studies all that they had to give her.—Home Progress Magazine.

A Boston clubman recently returned from a visit to New York city. In discussing his trip one of his friends asked him whether he had a policeman in his pocket. The clubman hesitated for a moment, seriously questioning his friend's sanity, when the latter added:

An Adequate Income for the Farmer

For many weeks past crop statisticians have been busy informing us through various mediums that this is an unusually prosperous year for the farmers. Almost daily we read under striking headlines that crops were never before so large on American farms, nor their market value so great. A bulletin given out by the Department of Agriculture under date of October 1st, 1912, quotes the Secretary as saying "Looks like prosperity. Increase over five hundred million dollars on last year's production," etc. Such statements from official sources are to the popular mind next to infallible, and everywhere one hears men say, "the farmers this year are rich."

As a matter of fact most men who are not themselves farmers are always lightly assuming that it is unnecessary to discuss the question of the farmer's income. They assume that farmers as a class are more than ordinarily well off. Almost always they can cite numbers of instances of farmers who have prospered, who have fine homes and money in the bank, and they, therefore, lightly assume that whoever talks of profitless living in the country talks without knowledge of the facts.

Some time ago the New York State College of Agriculture made a careful inquiry into the incomes of [illegible] farmers near Ithaca, N. Y. where the farmers prosper as they do in few parts of the state. They announced as a result of their investigation that these farmers had an average labor income of only $423.00 per year. That is to say, after paying 5% interest on their invested capital and accounting for work done by others, these farmers are able to pay themselves a wage of only about $1.20 per day. The results of this survey have never received general acceptance, partly because the scope of the investigation was so limited, but chiefly no doubt because most men had already set their minds to believe that the farmers were much more prosperous.

More recent investigations all tend to corroborate the Cornell survey in its deduction that the farmers do not have an adequate income. During the past summer careful inquiry was made on this point in all parts of Ohio and uniformly the same conclusion was justified, that relative poverty is the rule in the country and wealth, or even prosperity, the exception. Those to whom this statement seems extreme should be reminded that a discussion of this sort cannot be confined to any particular class of farmers in the country, but must consider them all; the tenant as well as the owner, the small holder as well as the man who numbers his acres by the hundred. Also they should be reminded that averages are often deceptive, and that the presence in the country of any considerable number of people who are unable to make an adequate income raises a serious problem.

As an instance of this point we may cite twenty-eight thoroughly representative farmers in Wayne Co., Ohio, whose financial condition was studied in minute detail. Fourteen of these men were owners and fourteen were tenants. The group as a whole was considered by those acquainted with the agricultural conditions in Wayne County to be typical of the country.

These farmers fall naturally into four income groups with seven farmers in each group. One group are all highly successful, judging by the monetary return which they receive from their labors. These men for the last year have averaged a clear annual profit of $900.00 apiece over and above all farm and household expenses. This sum would be quite sufficient to improve their farms, support their churches and educate their children and would probably permit them to lay by something each year. The second group are not so fortunate, but still make enough to comfortably supply their needs. These men averaged $100.00 clear for a year. The third group are but just able to maintain themselves above the poverty line. These gain $100.00 a year for all their needs above bare living expenses. Necessarily they live from hand to mouth. The fourth group, however, present the problem in its extreme form. The farms of these men yielded on an average, annual products worth less than $52.00 in excess of the actual cost of production. This sum must be stretched to cover household expenses and all other necessary expenditures of the household. This means that these men must continually draw upon their capital, if they have any, to maintain themselves and their families on the farms. Eventually, of course, they will be starved off the farm.

This typifies the conditions throughout most of rural Ohio. More than half of the farmers, if they deducted from their gross incomes an amount representing an interest rate of 5% on the value of their farms considered purely as an investment, would find that they had nothing or less than nothing left. They would be able to pay themselves no wage and in fact in some instances would have to take from one pocket what they put into the other, in return for the privilege of working their farms. The income of the third and fourth groups, "the under half," rather than the income of their more prosperous brothers is the final decisive factor in determining what is to be the future of the rural community. These are the men who are handicapped sometimes by lack of skill and sometimes by lack of tools in their struggle for economic well-being, but without sufficient capital they are wholly unable to supply this deficiency either in themselves or in their children. Social institutions require the support of whole communities and social improvements which half of a community cannot afford are bound to be a drag upon that community's resources. The question of helping the farmer to gain an adequate income must receive in the near future the serious attention of all those who are genuinely concerned with the welfare of country life.

The Demons of The Swamp

are mosquitos. As they sting they put deadly malaria germs in the blood. Then follow the icy chills and the fires of fever. The appetite flies and the strength fails; also malaria often paves the way for deadly typhoid. But Electric Bitters kill and cast out the malaria germs from the blood; give you a fine appetite and renew your strength. "After long suffering," wrote Wm. Fretwell, of Lucama, N. C., "three bottles drove all the malaria from my system, and I've had good health ever since." Best for all stomach, liver and kidney ills. 50 cents at Gehring's Pharmacy.

Vice and Society

Vice will never be eliminated by raids and arrests, investigations and reports. We have reported and raided for the past three thousand years. We are making the old, old mistake of trying to get rid of bad results without stopping detrimental sources. We are striving to clean the public river of morals at the mouth, while allowing the wells and springs which make the river to remain poisonous. Society can rid itself of nine-tenths of its vice if it will change fundamental social conditions. Society cannot rid itself of ninety-five one-hundredths of its vice if we remain satisfied with dealing with results instead of causes. Reports do not reform, and arrests do not stop. Society is selfish and sordid at the bottom, and so vice creeps out at the top. Stop vice? Where shall we start? Give every girl who works a sufficient wage to support herself. Give every man of mature age a sufficient wage to enable him to marry. Clean up our sordid tenements with their overcrowding and lack of privacy. Eliminate child labor. Give the young people wholesome and sufficient recreation. See that a "living wage" is paid for all work, so that body and soul may be well nourished and nourished well. Above all things, stop building "rescue" homes and "reform" schools. We can build a hundred rescue homes in every city, and vice will still be with us. We can increase our reform schools a hundred-fold, but vice will be ever present. Vice will be with us until we remove the causes of vice. The main causes of vice are economic and social. Morality depends more on a living wage than on rescue homes. Will vice—or virtue—be victorious? —Chicago Butterfly.

Saving Waste and Making Profit

There is an increasing demand on the part of market gardeners for more information and knowledge in regard to commercial canning of vegetables and fruits. It frequently happens that, as a result of temporary over-supply or lack of proper methods and facilities for distribution, many products of the farm and garden, more or less perishable in character, are annually allowed to go to waste. With a knowledge of the principles of canning and a small canning outfit, costing not over $10 or $15, most of this waste could be prevented and turned into profit. A gardener near Columbus annually adds from $700 to $1,000 to his income from a ten-acre tract by utilizing his surplus products in this way. A course in fruit and vegetable canning is now included in the instruction given at the College of Agriculture, Ohio State University. Twelve students are taking the course, and, with the limited facilities provided for this work, over 1,000 cans of vegetables have been put up this season.

Milk Producers Organize

"The Producers Dairy Company" is a new cooperative organization now in the process of formation in northeastern Ohio. It is to be a joint stock company composed of milk producers only. Each stockholder takes stock in proportion to the amount of milk produced, as follows: For each can of milk produced, (yearly average) one share of stock will be taken, each share to be worth $25. Fifty per cent of the stock is to be paid by January 1st, 1913, provided $75,000 is subscribed by that time. It is understood that the company will not start to do business until that amount has been subscribed. It is expected that the company will have control of 30,000 gallons of milk daily by the first of next July. Mr. T. A. Wright, one of the organizers, says "With the farmers in control of that amount, we think we will be able to have something to say about the price at which we are to furnish milk for the city trade. For a long time we have seen the need of organization, and we are working hard to secure for the farmers what the other fellows have had for years."

Big Cannery at Unionville

A hundred thousand dollar corporation for Unionville is the latest piece of news for this section of the country. It sounds almost too good to be true, and yet George B. Mackey of Unionville, the Cleveland contractor, insurance man and real estate dealer is the authority for the statement and the author of the enterprise. The new concern is to be known as the Mackhurst Supply and Manufacturing company. It is to have a canning factory, a breakfast food manufacturing department, a power plant and machine shop all combined. Such are the plans of its promoter.—Telegraph Republican.

Steel Corn Cribs

Two new steel corn cribs are being erected on the Ohio State University farm, at Columbus, to provide storage room for this year's bumper corn crop. These cribs have a capacity of 500 bushels each, and with the two already in use provide a total storage capacity of 2,000 bushels of corn. Both steel and wooden cribs have been used on the University farm. The steel cribs have proved very satisfactory, as they are durable and proof against birds, rodents, thieves and fire. These cribs are circular in form and made of perforated steel. The floor is of cement and steel and is moisture proof. The total cost is about $150 per crib.

Volume XIV. No. 39 — PAINESVILLE, OHIO, DECEMBER 5, 1912 — One Dollar Per Year

CITY OF GLASGOW HAS MONOPOLY ON SLAUGHTER HOUSE INDUSTRY; ITS GOOD THING FOR EVERYBODY

A few days ago a well known citizen of Painesville and former humane agent, called the attention of a Herald reporter to a familiar scene on the streets of Painesville.

It was that of two husky men taking an old, feeble, worn out cow to the slaughter house. One of the men tugging at a halter in front the other poking at the decrepit animal from behind and moving their captive along slowly between frequent intervals of rest and stops.

Our friend was indignant that such animals should be taken to the slaughter and then afterwards brought to the public market and sold as food at outrageous prices. Continuing he mentioned the fact that our markets were flooded with such unwholesome meats including not only cattle of this description, but says he, "I know of an instance in Lake county where cholera broke out among a lot of hogs, and the owner came to me and said that as soon as he discovered the disease he rushed his entire lot of stock to the market and got rid of them before they died upon his hands." Our friend mentioned numerous instances of this kind that had come to his attention particularly, while serving in an official position and concluded by saying that he did not know what could be done.

For several days after this conversation the Herald reporter did not look upon meat without some recollections of the old cow going to the slaughter and we had almost come to the conclusion that vegetables and fruits were the only proper food for men, when we came across Mayor Brand Whitlock's letter from Glasgow, Scotland, which provides a remedy against such conditions described above. We give extracts from the letter as follows, which was published last week in the Cleveland Press.

This is the fifth of the Whitlock series on progressive government in Europe.—Editor.

BY BRAND WHITLOCK
Mayor of Toledo

Glasgow: I had often heard and read of the abattoirs of the continental cities, and I was interested in the subject, because it had seemed to me that the high cost of living in America might perhaps be controlled were such a system generally established in our cities.

Some years ago a friend of mine in Illinois, who had been a very successful cattle raiser and dealer, went out of the business, explaining.

"It is far too precarious. The prices at which I must sell my cattle, and the prices at which I must buy the meat I eat, are fixed by three or four men who meet around a table every morning in Chicago."

City Long in Business

Glasgow has had public slaughter houses since 1744. For nearly a century before that time the fleshers had used premises of their own for killing animals, and in the old council minutes of 1666 it is recorded that the fleshers' custom of slaying animals on both sides of the street in Trongate "is very lothsome to the beholders."

In 1777—just 111 years later—the Glasgow markets in King-st were "justly admired as being the completest of their kind in Britain." These markets and slaughter houses then were regulated by the magistrates and council under the usual powers possessed by them under city charters and at common law.

But early in the last century the magistrates and council received enlarged powers, and thence and down the years these powers were still further enlarged until today the corporation controls the entire business of the killing of cattle and beasts for food.

City Has Monopoly

It exercises a rigid monopoly, and any person desiring his cattle slaughtered must take them to the public market houses, where they are inspected by the city inspectors, slaughtered for him, and upon the collection of a fee the meat is turned over to him for market purposes.

In 1904 the city bought a large amount of new land for markets and slaughter houses. Then the corporation sent a joint deputation composed of bailies and councilmen, and a few representatives of the Glasgow united fleshers society, to inspect the markets and slaughter houses in London and on the continent. After its report had been submitted to the markets committee of the council, the work on the new slaughter houses was begun.

An Ideal Abattoir

It was these new buildings and new yards through which I was shown. The premises have been arranged and constructed on scientific principles.

The walls outside are of stone, inside they are of enameled brick, and the division and screen walls and the killing rooms are of reinforced concrete.

A slaughter house is not a pleasant place, of course, but as we went through apartment after apartment I recalled how in my old reportorial days in Chicago I loathed an assignment that involved a visit to the stockyards.

That was a horrible place, and it was not very pleasant here in this abattoir in Glasgow, but there was no Upton Sinclair's "Jungle" here.

It was all as clean as such a place can be, with its white tiling—well, say something like a modern operating room in a hospital.

There is a large gymnasium for employes, and there, incidentally, they instruct young butchers before they permit them to slaughter the animals.

And there is a kitchen where they prepare food and tea for the girls working in the tripery. There also is a sort of club room for these girls, and one not far off for the men, and they both have shower baths like a new country club.

The Citizens' View

"We have no legal power to do all this," said the general superintendent.

"But doesn't somebody get out an injunction against you?" I asked.

"I suppose 20 years ago that might have been done, but we have a different spirit in Glasgow now. The citizens have learned, and they are heartily in favor of every expenditure, whether it is legal or not, so long as it is for the good of those who are rendering them service."

The buildings are all lit by electricity, and there is storage accommodation there in that one place for 745 cattle, 4000 sheep and 1000 pigs.

Change of Administration

(By Clyde H. Tavenner.)
Special Washington Correspondent of this newspaper.

Washington, Nov. 30.—Everybody wants to know about the distribution of patronage under the new administration. Every member of Congress of Democratic faith is receiving inquiries and applications by the hundred.

I came on to Washington at an earlier date than I intended, to try to discover the prospects of what will be done in a general way, but have found out nothing valuable or tangible. There is much guessing and newspaper talk, but that is all. All things concerning the distribution of patronage are up in the air, so to speak. President-Elect Wilson, who is resting in Bermuda, has not, so far as is generally known, given any information of his intention on this subject. Nothing definite will be known until he speaks.

The only things certain at this writing are:

1. President Taft has by executive order placed all the 4th class postmasters under the Civil Service, that is all postmasters drawing less than $1,000 per annum. This means that the present 4th class postmasters will hold for life, or during good behavior unless President Wilson revokes President Taft's order. Whether he will revoke it nobody knows.

2. Most of the places worth having except those which have to be confirmed by the Senate have been for some time under civil service. This greatly lessens the number of positions formerly available.

3. For twenty years the custom has been for federal officials appointed for four years, such as postmasters, U. S. Marshals, etc., to serve out their terms unless they took part in politics during their terms. Whether this custom will be continued it is impossible to say.

4. President Taft is said to have declared his intention to fill all vacancies as soon as they occur. But whether the Senate will confirm his appointees, or hold up their nominations, it is impossible to even guess.

5. The custom has been for the patronage of any particular state to be distributed through the Senators and Representatives thereof who are of the same political persuasion as the administration, if any such there be, and if none such, then through the national committeeman or some dependable friend or friends. Under that arrangement Representatives are depended upon to recommend postmasters in their own districts while Senators are depended upon to recommend postmasters in Congressional districts not represented by Congressmen of the same political faith as the President. Senators are also depended upon to recommend for marshalships and offices of that kind, including departmental positions and places in the consular and diplomatic service, and in fact all offices not local. Of course, as a rule, the Senators consult with Representatives in these matters, all trying to do the most possible for their constituents.

6. What scheme for selecting postmasters, etc., President Wilson and his Cabinet may adopt is wholly conjectural. Some advocate one plan and some another. Consequently it might be best for those intending to be applicants to let matters rest until the situation clears up somewhat; but where one or more aspirants for a particular place start in to secure signers to petitions, recommendations, etc., it might be wise for all aspirants to do so too.

It has been figured out by some of the newspaper correspondents in the national capital that Mr. Wilson, when he enters the White House on March 4, will find that he has the power to fill directly 10,839 government positions. They declare the appointive places requiring confirmation are divided as follows:

Departments—State, 441; Treasury 736; War (excluding army) 8; Justice, 383; Postoffice, 7,953; Navy (excluding officers) 11; Interior, 272; Agriculture, 3; Commerce and Labor (excluding census) 28; Civil service commission, 4; Government printing office, 1; Interstate Commerce Commission, 7; and Library of Congress, 1.

The places not requiring confirmation by the Senate are thus divided:

HOWLAND TO PUSH BILL

Seeks Quick Action on Presidential Preference Primary Act.

Washington, Dec. 2.—An effort will be made by Representative Paul Howland of Cleveland to get immediate action on his presidential preference primary bill.

"My bill is in line with the general movement the country over for direct primaries," said Howland, "and it appears to me that it should not encounter any serious opposition. It is a real progressive measure and I see no reason why the bill should not be reported out before the holidays.

"There will be no serious opposition on the Republican side. At the same time it seems to me the Democrats, even from a narrow partisan standpoint, should be ready to enact such legislation. If they do not they will have more trouble four years hence than we did in the last campaign."

MOTORMAN PARALYZED

And Passengers Given a Thrilling Ride on the C. P. & E. Ry. Sunday

William Scheu, a motorman on the C. P. & E. Ry. was stricken with paralysis while seated at his motor Sunday and carrying about twenty passengers.

The car ran wild for several miles and over a dangerous curve near Euclid, but was stopped by the conductor as soon as the condition of the motorman was discovered.

Move On Now!

says a policeman to a street crowd, and whacks heads if it don't. "Move on now," says the big, harsh mineral pills to bowel congestion and suffering follows. Dr. King's New Life Pills don't bulldoze the bowels. They gently persuade them to right action, and health follows. 25c at Gehring's Pharmacy.

Now is the time to boost a pavement for Mentor avenue between Painesville and Willoughby. Petitions should be circulated during the winter months in order that the pavement may be started before the summer is well under way. Lake county residents east of Willoughby should feel a little resentment that the west end of the county has all the good things in the way of roads and get busy with a few perfect highways themselves.—Telegraph Republican.

The $150,000,000 bond issue for good roads in New York state got by very easily in the election, the majority of some 400,000 showing how popular the project is. Bond issues for this purpose have been made in more than one eastern state in recent years, and the sentiment in their favor is probably due to the automobile more than to any other single cause. Itself a century hence, the main highways of this country, from ocean to ocean, will be something to be proud of. And they will be a valuable medium of transportation.

LECTURES

Arranged by Lake County Horticulturalists With Ohio Experiment Station

Through the co-operation of the experiment station at Wooster, this society will give a lecture course during the winter, commencing December 21, to be held in the Congregational church parlors, Painesville, O., at the regular meeting time of the society which is the third Saturday in each month. Each meeting during the winter will be all day with dinner at the church. With the exception of the December number there will be two lectures upon each date; one in the morning; also in the afternoon on different subjects.

As the December meeting is election of officers; there will be but one lecture and that at 1:30 p. m. Election of officers will occur in the morning, dinner at 12 o'clock. Let us note this part of the program and be prompt in getting through with the work to make way for the afternoon program.

These lectures will be along lines of horticulture by well known state speakers, men who are practical fruit growers of wide experience. These lectures will also be free to the public. We invite every man, woman and child, who is interested in the growing of fruit to attend these meetings.

Following is the program for the course.

Newspapers for the Progressives

Columbus, O., Dec. 2.—What is taken by members of the Democratic and Republican parties to mean an indication that the Progressive party plans to continue an active campaign between now and the next election, is the incorporation of a number of companies within the last few weeks to publish newspapers which will be operated in different cities of the state.

Incorporation papers were issued today by the secretary of state to the Political Outlook Printing Company of Lorain.

The paper, it is said, will espouse the cause of the Progressive party. The proposed publication was incorporated for $5,000, and it is reported that the capitalization will be increased in a short time.

LAWSON ON HIGH COST

(Cleveland Press)

It is watered stock that ails all of us; that is what makes the high cost of living, Thomas W. Lawson says. That is, Lawson does not insist that it is the inert watered stock in itself that makes high prices necessary, but it is the forcible collection of interest on watered stock through the medium of high prices that causes the high cost of living. That is the cause of the high price of shoes and sugar, of steel rails and scenery and things.

Lawson explains it over several pages of Everybody's Magazine. Condensed to a few lines he shows that:

Forty years ago the wealth of this country was twenty-five billions of dollars, of which five billions consisted of stocks and bonds drawing five per cent interest, and making the annual interest charge against the country and paid by the people two hundred and fifty millions.

Today the wealth of the country is one hundred and thirty-one billions, of which sixty billions consist of stocks and bonds drawing five per cent interest, thus making the present annual interest charge against the country, to be paid by the people, three billions of dollars.

Therefore the people are now paying annually $2,750,000,000 more in the way of interest than they did forty years ago.

But Lawson goes further and shows that this increase from five billions to sixty billions in interest bearing securities is not all capital actually invested. He insists that at least forty billions of the sixty billions is water, or "counterfeit" as he calls it, and cites the steel trust case as indicative evidence, showing that the steel trust plants were purchased for $250,000,000, and immediately capitalized at $1,500,000,000, on which the people are forced to pay interest whenever they directly or indirectly use any of the products of the steel trust.

That's it. That is what makes the high cost of living, says Lawson. But he does not stop with that. He goes on to say that the forty billions of "counterfeit" capital, on which the people are annually paying two billions a year interest, is largely owned by only ten thousand of the hundred million people of the country. The ninety-nine million nine hundred and ninety thousand pay, and the ten thousand take two billions a year in the form of interest on "counterfeit" stock and bonds. And in his Lawsonian way Thomas W. says that is the road to "black, brutal revolution," whatever that may mean and it sounds like it might mean a whole lot.

As a remedy Lawson would close the New York stock exchange to all stock gambling, but he has not yet explained how that alone will wipe out or even reduce the "counterfeit" securities now outstanding in the hands of more or less innocent purchasers, and on which some 99,990,000 of other innocent and more or less guileless citizens are paying big interest.

IN LIFE'S CURRENT

From a Macedonian parable we learn something of the life of man, as it is regarded in the Balkans.

When God created the world, so runs the parable, the first man came to him and said: "Now that I am placed upon earth tell me what is to be my lot."

And God answered: "You are to be master of everything on earth, and your span of life is to be thirty years."

"That is a splendid lot," replied the man, "but what a short time in which to enjoy it! Pray, why can't you add a few years to my sovereignty?"

And God laughed, and responded: "Sit over there in the corner; we will see what we can do for you."

Then came to God the first ox that had been created, and said: "You have made me a beast, pray, what is to be my lot, and how long am I to live on earth?"

And God answered: "You will live for thirty years. That man over there in the corner is to be your master. You will do as he tells you. You will draw his carts, plow his fields, and do his work for him."

"What a wretched lot," exclaimed the ox, "and for thirty long years! O, God, can't you take some of my years away from me?"

And the man who had been watching anxiously, came close and whispered: "Take it away from him and give it to me."

God chuckled, and said: "Well, I want to please you both, so I'll take twenty years from the ox's span of life and give them to man."

Next came a dog, inquiring about his lot. God pointed out the man sitting in the corner, and said: "He is to be your master. Your work is to watch over his flocks, his herds, his house and his goods, and he will feed you the scraps that fall from his table. And your span of life will be thirty years."

The dog began to whine piteously. "What a long, wretched existence! Couldn't you take some of it away from me, since my years are to be so unpleasant?"

And man heard again, and made the same request of God, that the years be cut off the dog's life and added to his. Again God laughed, and said: "Well, as you both wish, man shall have twenty years off the dog's life."

So the man went back to his corner happy. He had seventy years in all, now, thirty of his own, twenty from the ox and twenty from the dog.

And the last to come to God was an ape, who said: "Tell me, as you have the others, O, God, what is to be my lot on earth, and what my years?"

God, again pointing to the man, said: "He is to be your master. You will live thirty years, and he will feed you nuts and fruits. You will dance and cut capers to amuse him and his children."

"That's a hopeless life," said the ape. "Pray, why make it so long?"

Man's eyes were greedy with anticipation, and he crept again to God's side. "I haven't enough years, God," he whispered; "take some from the ape and give them to me."

God looked at him pityingly for a minute, then he laughed and said: "As you wish, I shall be glad to please both of you." So to man's seventy years he added twenty taken from the ape, making ninety in all.

Thus continues the parable: Man lives his own thirty years, which are free and untroubled; while from the thirtieth to the fiftieth year, his life is that of the ox—he has a yoke about his neck, and sweats and labors under the burdens of family cares, doing all he can to pile up money. After he is fifty, he gets no richer, and, like a dog, he watches over all that he has hoarded up, growling at anyone who approaches it. He is surly and pugnacious, always ready to snap and bite at the slightest provocation. Then from the seventieth to the ninetieth year he lives the life of the ape, cutting up queer capers and antics that make him laughed at: and so he closes the long span of years he begged for on the first day of his creation.

The Singletax in a Nutshell

(From the London "Land Values.")

Is the Singletax or the Taxation of Land Values confiscation? This is one of the questions that is being put and answered.

Some politicians in the high places of Liberalism look askance at the name Singletax, and for many and varied reasons set it aside as an impracticable policy and one which the Liberal Party are not likely to promote. Some of these same people tell us that land is in a different category from all other commodities, that indeed it is not a commodity, but the gift of the Creator, and that the value attaching to land is a communal value created by the presence, industry and needs of all the people. Well, this is the basic principle of the Singletax philosophy.

Some patches of ground are more fertile than others, some land is nearer to a market than other land, and because of this varying fertility and nearness to a market land differs in value.

The value of some land is very high in the centers of our towns and cities; in an agricultural district it is comparatively low; but all value attaching to land, apart from the value of improvements upon it, is a communal value; and the question is—who is to confiscate it?

The land is not there by Act of Parliament, nor is its communal value there because it has been bought or produced by the so-called owner. Everyone must use land, and someone must confiscate the value. Either the government must confiscate it, or the landlord.

As the days go on, doubts will be cleared away, and the movement for the taxation of land values, the first instalment of the Singletax, will be firmly established as a sane and enduring step to complete social justice.

CONGRESS IS IN SESSION AGAIN

HOUSE AND SENATE OF UNITED STATES CONVENE FOR THREE MONTHS' WORK.

MONEY BILLS TO BE PASSED

Appropriation Measures Make Up the Bulk of the Program, and Little Constructive Legislation Will be Attempted.

Washington, D. C.—The house and senate both convened at noon Dec. 2 for the final session of the 62nd congress. They will remain at work for about two weeks and then adjourn for the holidays. Returning to Washington early in January, the lawmakers will resume their labors, which will come to an end March 4th with the inauguration of Mr. Wilson as president.

Appropriation bills will take up the time of congress almost exclusively and there is no expectation that any great amount of constructive legislation can be accomplished before the advent of the Democratic administration. The members must act upon more than a dozen bills carrying total appropriations of over a billion dollars.

Two Bills Ready for Action.

Two of the annual budgets are now ready, the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill and the District of Columbia bill. These possibly will be passed by the house and sent over to the senate before the Christmas adjournment. The naval, military, postoffice, Indian, fortifications, diplomatic, pensions and minor budgets must be passed in January and February.

It is apparent to experienced members that such big questions as the tariff, the trusts and the currency problem cannot be tackled in the days intervening between Dec. 2 and March 4. Congress will be forced to appropriate at the rate of about $12,500,000 per day in order to meet the running expenses of the United States government during the fiscal year of 1914. This immense task practically precludes all hope of general legislation and unusually fast work will be required to dispose of the appropriation measures on the eve of the incoming administration.

On the other hand the Democrats of the house, cognizant of the fact that their party will control the entire government machinery after President Wilson is inducted into office, are loath to undertake general legislation during the short session even if the opportunity were offered.

What the Committees Will Do.

It is anticipated that the house committee on banking and currency will continue its investigation of the money trust and may make a tentative draft of bills to amend the currency laws. It is not expected, however, that any effort will be made to enact these into laws during the short session, and the committee in effect will mark time until the change of administrations.

The ways and means committee will plug ahead in its preparation of bills revising the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, but none of these measures will be brought out until the beginning of the 63rd congress, which will be convened in extraordinary session about April 15th.

The judiciary committee of the house will be largely concerned with the impeachment proceedings against Judge Robert W. Archbald of the commerce court, which are now pending before the senate and will be taken up very soon. This will prohibit the immediate consideration by the committee of the trust question.

TWO GIRLS DANCE IN PULPIT

Execute Most Amazing Terpsichorean Steps While Helping Minister to Illustrate Sermon.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Two chorus girls danced ragtime dances on the platform of the pulpit of Rev. G. L. Morrill in Minneapolis, illustrating his sermon on "Praise Him With the Dance." The most amazing and bold dances were executed by the girls, who are playing at a Minneapolis burlesque house, and the audience fairly gasped. The turkey trot, the "crab crawl," the tortoise tango, the "jelly wobble," angle worm wriggle, the "grizzly" and other unique dances.

Then began Mr. Morrill's sermon.

"Now you have witnessed just how fashionable society carries on when it gets started," said Mr. Morrill. "I admit that there is a decent dance, a dance helpful to the body, pleasant to the mind and harmless to the soul, but these rag dances that you have witnessed, not at all exaggerated, will make the devil blush, and he would hesitate to introduce them into hell."

ADMITS SLAYING BOYS

J. FRANK HICKEY CONFESSES TO DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

Also Says He Is Author of Postcards Writing Majority of Them While He Was Intoxicated.

Buffalo, N. Y.—J. Frank Hickey of Quincy, Mass., recently arrested in New Jersey, has confessed to the murder of 7-year-old Joseph Josephs of Lackawanna, a Buffalo suburb, the crime of which he stands indicted. He has also confessed to the murder of Michael Kruck, New York newsboy, ten years ago.

Hickey also confessed that he caused the death of a man named Joseph Morey in Lowell, Mass., 20 years ago, by putting laudanum in a glass of whiskey to make him sick.

The confessions came as the result of a conference by Dist. Atty. Dudley with the man and were made public by the county prosecutor.

Calmly and deliberately, Hickey told the story of his crimes. He related the facts leading up to them with the consummate sangfroid of an archfiend and the face of a child, but when he came to the actual tale of the committing of the murder, he broke down and wept.

"Drink, drink, that's what caused my terrible downfall," exclaimed the man, as his frame shook with sobs. "I've stood it as long as I could, but I've got to confess. Oh! the hell my life has been since that time when late in the afternoon of Oct. 12 I lured that little lad to his awful death.

"Yes, I wrote the postcards. I wrote them mostly when I was drunk. I drank to try and get away from my remorse and for a time it seemed I would forget it. But I used to become conscience-stricken and write the cards telling of my state of mind.

"I experienced the most poignant pangs of remorse after I had killed the little New York newsboy, but when, while intoxicated, I strangled the little Josephs lad to satisfy the demands of my terrible lust, I went almost crazy with remorse.

"I was near to suicide many times, but I always clung to life with a hope that some time, somewhere, I would be able to forget, but all to no purpose.

"Now I am ready to take the consequence of my terrible acts. I am ready to pay the penalty society will demand."

The body of Michael Kruck was found in an excavation in Central park, New York, on the night of Dec. 10, 1902. Death had been due to strangulation. His father, who is a tailor, and his mother are still living in New York.

Young Josephs disappeared the afternoon of Oct. 12, 1911.

Teddy Rewards Protector.

New York City.—For presence of mind, courage and quick action in saving his life on Oct. 14, when attacked by the assassin John Schrank, now in an insane asylum, Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt has presented to his former private secretary, Elbert E. Martin, a $200 gold watch. On the inner side of the watch case is inscribed: "To Elbert E. Martin from Theodore Roosevelt in remembrance of Oct. 14, 1912."

Appoints Rayner's Successor.

Baltimore, Md.—William Purnell Jackson, Republican national committeeman from Maryland, has been appointed by Gov. Goldsborough as United States senator to succeed the late Senator Isidor Rayner, who died recently in Washington. In making this selection Gov. Goldsborough listened to the advice of his friends. Mr. Jackson will serve until the meeting of the legislature in 1914, when a candidate will be selected to fill out the unexpired term of Senator Rayner, which lasts until March, 1917.

Hyde Guilty of Bribery.

New York City.—Charles H. Hyde, former city chamberlain and protege of Mayor Gaynor, was convicted of bribery, the punishment for which is ten years' imprisonment or $10,000 fine, or both, at the discretion of the court. The verdict of the jury was rendered in 44 minutes.

Immediately after the verdict had been recorded and the formal motions for setting aside the verdict and the granting of a new trial had been made, Hyde was hurried across the bridge of sighs to the Tombs.

* * *

Zanesville, O.—Nine persons were killed, one is dying and six more seriously injured in a rear-end collision on the Pennsylvania lines, ten miles east of here at 6 o'clock in the evening.

The engine of a passenger train, westbound on the Zanesville division, ploughed into the rear coach of a train bound for Zanesville from the Cleveland division. The engine and car were telescoped. The entire length of the car was piled on top of the engine and extended from the pilot to the tender.

Without a moment's warning the crash came. Passengers were hurled from their seats and, every avenue of escape being cut off, they were literally cooked alive from escaping steam from the engine beneath them.

Steam Cooked Victims.

Mrs. Nellie Taylor of Zanesville was taken from between the engine and car with her body literally cooked. She was also badly cut about the head and arms.

Henry Balbian, superintendent of the Dresden plant of the Cleveland Woolen Mills, was found on top of the boiler enveloped in escaping steam. His head was badly cut. His daughter and son-in-law both escaped injury.

The Cleveland express was brought to a stop when a plug blew out. While the engine was disabled a flagman was ordered out to flag the approaching train of the Zanesville division. The flagman had only proceeded a few hundred feet when the train rounded a curve. The warning was too late and in another minute the crash came.

Powers was superintending the installation of a new elevator when his hand was caught by the main pulley wheel on the roof. Then his arm, shoulder and finally his whole body was irresistibly drawn into the machinery, while he cried piteously for help from his men, who shivered with fright and were powerless.

Judge Robert W. Archbald of the United States commerce court, on trial before the senate under articles of impeachment found against him by the house of representatives.

WHAT ARCHBALD TRIAL IS ABOUT

Washington.—In a nutshell, the following are the principal points in the case of Judge Robert W. Archbald, facing impeachment before the senate.

There are 13 charges against Archbald. The substance of them is that Archbald used his office to obtain personal and pecuniary profit.

He is charged with having tried to buy culm dumps in the Scranton coal fields owned by railroads.

It is alleged he attempted to obtain loans from attorneys or litigants in his court.

He is accused of having accepted a purse of gold from attorneys engaged in practice in his court.

The house committee that investigated Archbald reported that "his sense of moral responsibility has become deadened."

Archbald's trial is the first impeachment proceedings since 1905, when Judge Swayne of Florida was acquitted.

SPLITS LARGE MERGER

SUPREME COURT ORDERS RAILROAD COMBINE DISSOLVED.

Highest Tribunal in the United States Holds Sherman Anti-Trust Law Has Been Violated.

Washington, D. C.—Declaring illegal the Harriman railroad and shipping monopoly, the supreme court sustained the government's trust busting suit by ordering dissolved the merger of the Southern Pacific, Union Pacific and "Salt Lake" railroads. "Wizard" Harriman's monument of railroad and Pacific coast shipping combines was held a gross violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. The highest court unanimously refused to invoke its "rule of reason" laid down in the Standard Oil and Tobacco trust cases, to approve the railroad combine. The merger was declared in restraint of trade.

The court directed the circuit court of Utah to take charge of the dissolution of interests of the Southern Pacific held by the Union Pacific.

Presentation of the plans to the supreme court of the United States within three months is ordered.

Defendants in the suit were the Union Pacific, Oregon Short Line, Oregon Railroad & Navigation Co., San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake, Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, Southern Pacific, Northern Pacific, and Great Northern railroads; the Farmers Loan & Trust Co., of New York, and the following individuals: E. H. Harriman, Jacob H. Schiff, Otto H. Kahn of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., James Stillman, H. H. Rogers, Henry C. Frick, former Senator William A. Clark, and President Robert S. Lovett, of the Union Pacific.

In February, 1908, the government filed its dissolution suit, in the federal circuit court, which at Salt Lake City, about two years ago, dismissed the entire prosecution.

The Northern Pacific and Great Northern railroads were merely nominal defendants, the government alleging Harriman and his conspirators tried to "gobble up" those roads in 1901 by buying a majority of Northern Pacific stock to secure control of the "Burlington" feeder of the Northern Pacific. In its "Northern securities" decision, the supreme court held void the Northern Pacific deal.

Grossly increased rates, prevention of construction of new branch lines, and "sensible" deterioration of service were the three principal evils cited by the government.

Submits Budget to House.

Washington, D. C.—Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh submitted to the house estimates of the amount of money that will be needed to run the government departments for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1913. According to Mr. MacVeagh's figures, congress is called upon to appropriate $823,415,465.

Nearly $57,000,000 for rivers and harbors improvements was asked in estimates submitted to congress by Brig. Gen. W. H. Bixby, chief of army engineers.

Girl Begs to Be Locked Up.

Columbus, O.—A girl, 20 years old, visited the penitentiary and tearfully begged Warden Jones to place her in a cell, where she could stay for the remainder of her life. The girl told a pitiful story about the treatment she received from the outside world after she had been paroled from a prison. Her former friends hounded her, and when she obtained a position they would follow her and cause her to lose it. Warden Jones notified Maj. Collins of the Volunteers of America, who took the girl in charge.

ENGINE EXPLOSION

BODY OF THE ENGINEER CAN NOT BE FOUND.

Locomotive on C., H. & D. Blows Up and Twelve Cars Are Derailed—Pieces Thrown 200 Yards.

Hamilton, Ohio.—Engine No. 416, on a southbound C., H. and D. special freight, blew up near Stockton, Butler county, derailing 12 loaded cars and completely destroying the engine. Engineer William McDonald, of Lima, Ohio, was instantly killed and his body can not be found. Portions of the grating of the engine were blown into a cornfield 200 yards from the track and rails were dug up from the road bed by the compact of the explosion and stuck up like telegraph poles.

All the cars were loaded with merchandise, many with rolls of paper from Ryallo, others with groceries.

Not two minutes before the engine blew up Front Brakeman D. T. Tolling, of Dayton, Ohio, climbed over to the front engine No. 406 and he and Engineer Blanchard escaped by a miracle.

OPPOSE THE NEW DISTRICTS.

School Superintendents Hold Meeting in Dayton.

Dayton, O.—At the session of the Western Ohio Superintendents' Round Table here opinions of a varied type were given relative to the proposed establishment of special school districts in Ohio. However, the association went on record as being opposed to the establishment of such districts unless the proposed districts have sufficient funds to maintain their own schools. The superintendents were favorably inclined to the proposition to appoint some one who is interested in education, and is well versed in that branch to the Tax Budget Commission. Dr. Alston Ellis, president of Ohio University, Athens, was appointed chairman of the committee which will take up legislative matters with the proper legislative committee at Columbus.

TO COST TWO MILLION.

Columbus, Ohio.—When it stands completed about four years hence at Broad and High streets, the new Deshler hotel will represent an investment of $2,000,000, according to John G. Deshler. Of this sum the Deshlers will spend $1,000,000 on the building, the ground, which is owned by them in fee simple, is estimated to be worth $600,000, and the Wallick Brothers of New York, who have leased it for 25 years, beginning at the completion of the structure, have bound themselves by the contract to spend at least $300,000 in furnishings.

MOTHER OF EDITORS DIES.

Ripley, Ohio.—Mrs. Harriet Campbell, widow of Charles F. Campbell, founder of the Ripley Bee, died here. She would have been 100 years old in January next. Four sons are in the newspaper business—J. Q. A. Campbell and Charles D. Campbell, at Bellefontaine, Angus K. Campbell, at Des Moines, Iowa, and W. A. Campbell, at Lima. The fifth son, Frank Campbell, died at Lima five years ago. One daughter, Mrs. A. Christie, of Ripley, remains.

CLASPS DOLL IN DEATH.

Newark, Ohio.—Four-year-old Edith Merrill, daughter of Don Merrill, was burned to a crisp at the Merrill home in Utica when her clothing caught fire from an open grate. Her charred body, all but lifeless, was found by the mother when she returned from a neighbor's home after a few moments' absence. The child's burned and blackened hands tightly grasped a small doll to her breast as she lay dying on the floor.

BOAT RUNS INTO DAM.

Gallipolis, Ohio.—Dam No. 11 at the mouth of the Great Kanawha river, four miles east of here, was put out of commission when the towboat Otto Marmet collided with it and broke several wickets. West Virginia coal operators can not ship by water to Cincinnati until the government repairs the dam.

FELICITY SWEPT BY FIRE.

Felicity, Ohio.—This town suffered a heavy fire loss when flames which broke out in a livery stable at night spread rapidly to other buildings. The town hall was among those destroyed. The Bethel fire department lent valuable assistance in fighting the fire.

AUTO WRECK KILLS TWO.

Marietta, O.—When their automobile went over a bank, while running at a high rate of speed, Martin Beaver, 58 years old, was killed and his son Forest, 27, was fatally injured. The steering wheel post penetrated the young man's lung. The Beavers were going hunting. Harry English, third member of the party, rolled from the machine as it jumped and escaped injury. The automobile turned three somersaults in the air, alighting in a ravine 50 feet below the road.

MAN KILLED BY AUTO.

Dayton, O.—Thomas Lean, 28 years old, married, a carriage trimmer, was run down and fatally injured by an automobile driven by Mrs. Catherine Osterle, of Xenia, O. Mrs. Osterle was accompanied by her sister-in-law, Miss Mary Osterle, Mrs. Homer Hicks, Mrs. J. R. Ryan and Miss Michelia Lane. Lean did not notice the approach of the machine and stepped immediately in front of it. He died while being taken to the Miami Valley hospital.

AUTO ACCIDENT IS FATAL

Machine Goes Over Fifty Foot Embankment and Two Are Killed.

Marietta, Ohio.—Martin Beaver, [illegible] instantly killed and his son Forest was fatally injured when a hunting party in an automobile went over a 50-foot embankment half a mile from New Matamoras. They were driving rapidly and left the road when they swung around another car. A third man in the auto was not hurt.

The car turned over three times in its fall. Martin Beaver's head was crushed and his neck broken, while the steering wheel crushed his son's breast, driving a rib into one of his lungs.

GETS HOLIDAY PARDON.

Dick Hunter, After Serving Ten Years, Is Free.

Columbus, O.—After serving ten years of a life sentence for breaking into an inhabited dwelling, Dick Hunter, a Lucas county prisoner, walked out of the Ohio penitentiary, a free man, with Gov. Harmon's Thanksgiving pardon in his pocket. He went to Wisconsin, where his family now lives.

The selection of Hunter as the recipient of holiday clemency was made after Gov. Harmon called Hunter to his office.

The state board of administration did not grant a Thanksgiving parole this year, as it has done at other holidays.

WOMAN KILLED BY TRAIN.

Hamilton, Ohio.—Mrs. Adam Russell, of 429 Mill street, Lockland, Hamilton county, Ohio, was instantly killed and both legs of Rowena Middy, aged 16, were broken when C., H. and D. Passenger Train No. 22 struck the carriage in which they were riding with J. D. Middy and Eva Middy. The train was going about 60 miles an hour, and nothing was found of the horse or rig. The escape of the other occupants of the rig was nothing short of miraculous.

FORMER OHIOAN IS DEAD.

Dayton, O.—Abner Leonard Ross, 80, native of Lebanon, but for several years proprietor of the Old Cooper hotel here, is dead at Los Angeles, Cal. He built up a string of hotels from Lookout Mountain to the Florida waters and from Chicago to the Pacific. His business career was started by operating a stage line between Lebanon and Dayton. At the time of his death he is said to have been heavily interested in Los Angeles real estate.

TWO RIDERS ARE KILLED.

Piqua, Ohio.—Homer Whitlock, 18 years old, and Ora Wilhelm, 23 years old, were killed in a motorcycle collision on the new Piqua and Troy speedway. Whitlock attempted to pass the auto of W. H. McClusky, of Sidney, who was approaching in the opposite direction. Wilhelm ran from behind the auto and attempted to pass at the same time. Their machines crashed into each other and the riders were thrown together, breaking their necks.

PROLIFIC CORN IS SHOWN.

Springfield, Ohio.—At the Clark county corn show held by the Merchants' Association, O. M. Conner, of Yellow Springs, had on display a sample of what is known as prolific corn, that has attracted much attention from the farmers. Each stalk raises from three to five ears, and during the last year his crop averaged 178 bushels to the acre. Mr. Conner says that he can sell his corn at a higher price than the common variety.

ACCIDENT RESTORES HEARING.

Columbus, Ohio.—Two weeks after being struck by a Mound street car and badly bruised, Mrs. Samantha Wilkins, aged 79, is recovering her hearing. She was almost deaf before the accident, but now is able to hear without the use of her ear trumpet. Mrs. Wilkins lives with her son at 1241 East Mound street. She was crossing the street when a car she failed to see, hit her.

CARS COLLIDE, INJURING TEN.

Columbus, O.—Ten people were slightly injured when two Columbus, Delaware and Marion interurban cars collided at a crossing. The accident was due to the failure of the air brake on one of the cars to work, it is said.

Lima, O.—Carl Ottenther, 20 years old, of this city, was accidentally shot and killed. As he was climbing a wire fence the trigger of his shotgun caught and the gun was discharged into his breast.

Wapakoneta, O.—William Runkel, an architect, designer and chief stockholder in the new mausoleum, which was completed recently at the local cemetery, died recently of typhoid fever. His body will be the first to find a resting place in the new building. Runkle originated the plan of constructing the mausoleum.

Lebanon, O.—Mrs. John Van Note died at her home here. Just one week ago her twin brother died at his home in Dayton on his 84th birthday anniversary. He was Henry P. Smith.

FOREIGN RELATIONS IS TAFT'S SUBJECT

Congress Is Told of Improvements in Consular and Diplomatic Corps and Good Results of Uncle Sam's Efforts in Latin America.

Washington, Dec. 3.—President Taft submitted to congress today the first of several messages. It was devoted to our foreign relations and in part was as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives: The foreign relations of the United States actually and potentially affect the state of the Union to a degree not widely realized and hardly surpassed by any other factor in the welfare of the whole nation. The position of the United States in the moral, intellectual, and material relations of the family of nations should be a matter of vital interest to every patriotic citizen. The national prosperity and power impose upon us duties which we cannot shirk if we are to be true to our ideals. The tremendous growth of the export trade of the United States has already made that trade a very real factor in the industrial and commercial prosperity of the country. With the development of our industries the foreign commerce of the United States must rapidly become a still more essential factor in its economic welfare. Whether we have a far-seeing and wise diplomacy and are not recklessly plunged into unnecessary wars, and whether our foreign policies are based upon an intelligent grasp of present-day world conditions and a clear view of the potentialities of the future or are governed by a temporary and timid expediency or by narrow views befitting an infant nation, are questions in the alternative consideration of which must convince any thoughtful citizen that no department of national policy offers greater opportunity for promoting the interests of the whole people on the one hand, or greater chance on the other of permanent national injury, than that which deals with the foreign relations of the United States.

The fundamental foreign policies of the United States should be raised high above the conflict of partisanship and wholly dissociated from differences as to domestic policy. In its foreign affairs the United States should present to the world a united front. The intellectual, financial and industrial interests of the country and the publicist, the wage earner, the farmer, and citizen of whatever occupation must co-operate in a spirit of high patriotism to promote that national solidarity which is indispensable to national efficiency and to the attainment of national ideals.

The relations of the United States with all foreign powers remain upon a sound basis of peace, harmony and friendship. A greater insistence upon justice to American citizens or interests wherever it may have been denied and a stronger emphasis of the need of mutuality in commercial and other relations have only served to strengthen our friendships with foreign countries by placing those friendships upon a firm foundation of realities as well as aspirations.

Before briefly reviewing the more important events of the last year in our foreign relations, which it is my duty to do as charged with their conduct and because diplomatic affairs are not of a nature to make it appropriate that the secretary of state make a formal annual report, I desire to touch upon some of the essentials to the safe management of the foreign relations of the United States and to endeavor, also, to define clearly certain concrete policies which are the logical modern corollaries of the undisputed and traditional fundamentals of the foreign policy of the United States.

Reorganization of the State Department.

At the beginning of the present administration the United States, having fully entered upon its position as a world power, with the responsibilities thrust upon it by the results of the Spanish-American war, and already engaged in laying the groundwork of a vast foreign trade upon which it should one day become more and more dependent, found itself without the machinery for giving thorough attention to, and taking effective action upon, a mass of intricate business vital to American interests in every country in the world.

The department of state was an archaic and inadequate machine lacking most of the attributes of the foreign office of any great modern power. With an appropriation made upon my recommendation by the congress on August 5, 1909, the department of state was completely reorganized.

There were created divisions of Latin-American affairs and of far eastern, near eastern, and western European affairs. To these divisions were called from the foreign service diplomatic and consular officers possessing experience and knowledge gained by actual service in different parts of the world and thus familiar with political and commercial conditions in the regions concerned. The work was highly specialized. The result is that where previously this government from time to time would emphasize in its foreign relations one or another policy, now American interests in every quarter of the globe are being cultivated with equal assiduity.

Merit System in Consular and Diplomatic Corps.

Expert knowledge and professional training must evidently be the essence of this reorganization. Without a trained foreign service there would not be men available for the work in the reorganized department of state. President Cleveland has taken the first step toward introducing the merit system in the foreign service. That had been followed by the application of the merit principle, with excellent results, to the entire consular branch. Almost nothing, however, had been done in this direction with regard to the diplomatic service. In this age of commercial diplomacy it was evidently of the first importance to train an adequate personnel in that branch of the service. Therefore, on November 26, 1909, by an executive order I placed the diplomatic service up to the grade of secretary of embassy, inclusive, upon exactly the same strict non-partisan basis of the merit system, rigid examination for appointment and promotion only for efficiency, as had been maintained without exception in the consular service.

Successful Efforts in Promotion of Peace.

In the field of work toward the ideals of peace this government negotiated, but to my regret was unable to consummate, two arbitration treaties which set the highest mark of the aspiration of nations toward the substitution of arbitration and reason for war in the settlement of international disputes. Through the efforts of American diplomacy several wars have been prevented or ended. I refer to the successful tripartite mediation of the Argentine Republic, Brazil and the United States between Peru and Ecuador, the bringing of the boundary dispute between Panama and Costa Rica to peaceful arbitration, the staying of warlike preparations when Hayti and the Dominican Republic were on the verge of hostilities, the stopping of a war in Nicaragua; the halting of internecine strife in Honduras. The government of the United States was thanked for its influence toward the restoration of amicable relations between the Argentine Republic and Bolivia. The diplomacy of the United States is active in seeking to assuage the remaining ill-feeling between this country and the Republic of Colombia. In the recent civil war in China the United States successfully joined with the other interested powers in urging an early cessation of hostilities. An agreement has been reached between the governments of Chile and Peru whereby the celebrated Tacna-Arica dispute, which has so long embittered international relations on the west coast of South America, has at last been adjusted. Simultaneously came the news that the boundary dispute between Peru and Ecuador had entered upon a stage of amicable settlement. The position of the United States in reference to the Tacna-Arica dispute between Chile and Peru has been one of non-intervention, but one of friendly influence and pacific counsel throughout the period during which the dispute in question has been the subject of interchange of views between this government and the two governments immediately concerned. In the general easing of international tension on the west coast of South America the tripartite mediation, to which I have referred, has been a most potent and beneficent factor.

China.

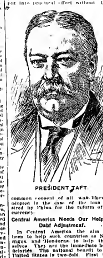
In China the policy of encouraging financial investment to enable that country to help itself has had the result of giving new life and practical application to the open-door policy. The consistent purpose of the present administration has been to encourage the use of American capital in the development of China by the promotion of those essential reforms to which China is pledged by treaties with the United States and other powers. The hypothecation to foreign bankers in connection with certain industrial enterprises, such as the Hukuang railways, of the national revenues upon which these reforms depended, led the department of state early in the administration to demand for American citizens participation in such enterprises in order that the United States might have equal rights and an equal voice in all questions pertaining to the disposition of the public revenues concerned. The same policy of promoting international accord among the powers having similar treaty rights as ourselves in the matters of reform, which could not be put into practical effect without the common consent of all, was likewise adopted in the case of the loan desired by China for the reform of its currency.



PRESIDENT TAFT

Central America Needs Our Help in Debt Adjustment.

In Central America the aim has been to help such countries as Nicaragua and Honduras to help themselves. They are the immediate beneficiaries. The national benefit to the United States is two-fold. First, it is obvious that the Monroe doctrine is more vital in the neighborhood of the Panama canal and the zone of the Caribbean than anywhere else. There, too, the maintenance of that doctrine falls most heavily upon the United States. It is therefore essential that the countries within that sphere shall be removed from the jeopardy involved by heavy foreign debt and chaotic national finances and from the ever-present danger of international complications due to disorder at home. Hence the United States has been glad to encourage and support American bankers who were willing to lend a helping hand to the financial rehabilitation of such countries because this financial rehabilitation and the protection of their custom houses from being the prey of would-be dictators would remove at one stroke the menace of foreign creditors and the menace of revolutionary disorder.

The second advantage to the United States is one affecting chiefly all the southern and gulf ports and the business and industry of the south. The republics of Central America and the Caribbean possess great natural wealth. They need only a measure of stability and the means of financial regeneration to enter upon an era of peace and prosperity, bringing profit and happiness to themselves and at the same time creating conditions sure to lead to a flourishing interchange of trade with this country.

I wish to call your especial attention to the recent occurrences in Nicaragua, for I believe the terrible events recorded there during the revolution of the past summer—the useless loss of life, the devastation of property, the bombardment of defenseless cities, the killing and wounding of women and children, the torturing of non-combatants to exact contributions, and the suffering of thousands of human beings—might have been averted had the department of state, through approval of the loan convention by the senate, been permitted to carry out its now well-developed policy of encouraging the extending of financial aid to weak Central American states with the primary objects of avoiding just such revolutions by assisting those republics to rehabilitate their finances, to establish their currency on a stable basis, to remove the custom houses from the danger of revolutions by arranging for their secure administration and to establish reliable banks.

Agricultural Credits.

A most important work, accomplished in the past year by the American diplomatic officers in Europe, is the investigation of the agricultural credit system in the European countries. Both as a means to afford relief to the consumers of this country through a more thorough development of agricultural resources and as a means of more sufficiently maintaining the agricultural population, the project to establish credit facilities for the farmers is a concern of vital importance to this nation. No evidence of prosperity among well-established farmers should blind us to the fact that lack of capital is preventing a development of the nation's agricultural resources and an adequate increase of the land under cultivation; that agricultural production is fast falling behind the increase in population, and that, in fact, although these well-established farmers are maintained in increasing prosperity because of the natural increase in population, we are not developing the industry of agriculture.

The need of capital which American farmers feel today had been experienced by the farmers of Europe, with their centuries-old farms, many years ago. The problem had been successfully solved in the old world and it was evident that the farmers of this country might profit by a study of their systems. I therefore ordered, through the department of state, an investigation to be made by the diplomatic officers in Europe, and I have laid the results of this investigation before the governors of the various states with the hope that they will be used to advantage in their forthcoming meeting.

Increase of Foreign Trade.

In my last annual message I said that the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, was noteworthy as marking the highest record of exports of American products to foreign countries. The fiscal year 1912 shows that this rate of advance has been maintained, the total domestic exports having a valuation approximately of $2,200,000,000, as compared with a fraction over $2,000,000,000 the previous year. It is also significant that manufactured and partly manufactured articles continue to be the chief commodities forming the volume of our augmented exports, the demands of our own people for consumption requiring that an increasing proportion of our abundant agricultural products be kept at home. In the fiscal year 1911 the exports of articles in the various stages of manufacture, not including foodstuffs partly or wholly manufactured, amounted approximately to $907,500,000. In the fiscal year 1912 the total was nearly $1,022,000,000, a gain of $114,000,000.

Advantage of Maximum and Minimum Tariff Provision.

The importance which our manufactures have assumed in the commerce of the world in competition with the manufactures of other countries again draws attention to the duty of this government to use its utmost endeavors to secure impartial treatment for American products in all markets. Healthy commercial rivalry in international intercourse is best assured by the possession of proper means for protecting and promoting our foreign trade. It is natural that competitive countries should view with some concern this steady expansion of our commerce. If in some instances the measures taken by them to meet it are not entirely equitable, a remedy should be found. In former messages I have described the negotiations of the department of state with foreign governments for the adjustment of the maximum and minimum tariff as provided in section 2 of the tariff law of 1909. The advantages secured by the adjustment of our trade relations under this law have continued during the last year, and some additional cases of discriminatory treatment of which we had reason to complain have been removed. The department of state has for the first time in the history of this country obtained substantial most-favored-nation treatment from all the countries of the world. There are, however, other instances which, while apparently not constituting undue discrimination in the sense of section 2, are nevertheless exceptions to the complete equity of tariff treatment for American products that the department of state consistently has sought to obtain for American commerce abroad.

These developments confirm the opinion conveyed to you in my annual message of 1911 that while the maximum and minimum provision of the tariff law of 1909 has been fully justified by the success achieved in removing previously existing undue discriminations against American products, yet experience has shown that this feature of the law should be amended in such way as to provide a fully effective means of meeting the varying degrees of discriminatory treatment of American commerce in foreign countries still encountered, as well as to protect against injurious treatment on the part of foreign governments, through either legislative or administrative measures, the financial interests abroad of American citizens whose enterprises enlarge the market for American commodities.

I cannot too strongly recommend to congress the passage of some such enabling measure as the bill which was recommended by the secretary of state in his letter of December 13, 1911. The object of the proposed legislation is, in brief, to enable the executive to apply, as the case may require, to any or all commodities, whether or not on the free list from a country which discriminates against the United States, a graduated scale of duties up to the maximum of 25 per cent. ad valorem provided in the present law. Flat tariffs are out of date.

Congress should fully realize the conditions which obtain in the world as we find ourselves at the threshold of our middle age as a nation. We have emerged full grown as a peer in the great concourse of nations. We have passed through various formative periods. We have been self-centered in the struggle to develop our domestic resources and deal with our domestic questions. The nation is now too mature to continue in its foreign relations those temporary expedients natural to a people to whom domestic affairs are the sole concern. In the past our diplomacy has often consisted, in normal times, in a mere assertion of the right to international existence. We are now in a larger relation with broader rights of our own and obligations to others than ourselves. A number of great guiding principles were laid down early in the history of this government. The recent task of our diplomacy has been to adjust those principles to the conditions of today, to develop their corollaries, to find practical applications of the old principles expanded to meet new situations. Thus are being evolved bases upon which can rest the superstructure of policies which must grow with the destined progress of this nation. The successful conduct of our foreign relations demands a broad and a modern view. We can not meet new questions nor build for the future if we confine ourselves to outworn dogmas of the past and to the perspective appropriate at our emergence from colonial times and conditions. The opening of the Panama canal will mark a new era in our international life and create new and world wide conditions which, with their vast correlations and consequences, will obtain for hundreds of years to come. We must not wait for events to overtake us unawares. With continuity of purpose we must deal with the problems of our external relations by a diplomacy modern, resourceful, magnanimous and fittingly expressive of the high ideals of a great nation.

WM. H. TAFT.

The White House,
December 3, 1912.

IT DIDN'T GET TO HIM.

"Did you like the football game as well as you like baseball, Mr. McNutt?"

"No; it didn't get to me at all."

"Why? Did you consider it too brutal?"

"It wasn't that. I couldn't feel a personal interest in any of the players. While I sat there watching them I was unable to forget that instead of fightin' for the glory of our city to put it high up in the list, mebby above some of the rotten towns that claim a bigger population than we have, based on the latest directory estimates, they were merely strugglin' in behalf of their alma mater, whatever that is."

Humorous Legal Quibble.

Here is a queer case for an action. A man was insane and determined to throw himself out of the window of the asylum. He made several attempts, and was prevented by the servants. Put in a new apartment, he tried it again, jumped out of the window, fell on the lawn, injured himself seriously, but, strange to say, the shock cured his mental disorder. At once he sued the officers of the asylum for negligence. The plaintiff was nonsuited. There is a delightful legal quibble about this, for the pros and cons are many.

Couldn't Take Prescription.

Physician—"You should seek a higher altitude." Patient—"It always gets me dizzy to travel by airship."

COX SELECTS HOUSE

GOV.-ELECT VISITS COLUMBUS AND LEASES RESIDENCE.

Has Conference With Gov. Harmon in Regard to Recommendations of Messages to Legislature.

Governor-elect James M. Cox recently inspected the government he is to administer and the city which is to be his home for at least two years. Exchange of views with Gov. Harmon regarding the recommendations for legislation which the outgoing and incoming governors will make in their respective messages, discussion of tax reforms with the state tax commission and appointments with State Chairman Finley and others comprised the governmental portion of his day in Columbus.

Then there was house hunting, several hours of it, under guidance of President John L. Vance, of the Citizens' Trust and Savings Bank. Mr. Cox was most favorably impressed with the E. K. Stewart residence, East Broad street and Monroe avenue, and decided to lease it.

The governor-elect said he expected to do much entertaining during his official residence in the city and wanted a house sufficiently large and commodious. His mother and his two elder children, who are in school, will constitute his family. The youngest child, a boy, will remain with the mother at Cleveland.

Are Opposed to Expert Testimony.

In keeping with the progressive plans outlined at the recent joint meeting of the board of administration and the board of charities it is probable that the legislature at the coming session will be asked to take action toward the regulation of expert testimony in cases of insanity. There is a growing sentiment against the employing of alienists by either the prosecution of the defense in criminal cases.

H. H. Shirer, executive secretary of the charity board, declared that he has found many penologists who are opposed to the work of experts in cases where the sanity of a prisoner is to be decided and that he himself feels that the system should be abolished.

"I much prefer the plan followed in Milwaukee at the Schrank trial," he explained. "In that instance the court merely appointed a commission and when it gave its decision it was final. I should like to see a similar plan adopted here in Ohio."

The legislature is given power to regulate expert testimony by amendment No. 15, adopted at the election of September 3. It reads: "Laws may be passed for the regulation of the use of expert witnesses and expert testimony in criminal trials and proceedings."

Anti-Tuberculosis Cause Wins.

Not only is the county tuberculosis hospital law valid, but when a county joins with adjoining ones to build a hospital it also cannot withdraw from the agreement and refuse to pay its share of the maintenance cost. That was the decision of the supreme court, which granted George P. Brissell a writ of mandamus against Stark County Commissioners compelling them to pay $7,976.60 as the county's share of the expenses of operating in 1910 in the tuberculosis hospital built at a cost of $100,000 by Stark, Mahoning, Columbiana, Portage and Summit counties. The decision, which physicians regard as making easier the fight against tuberculosis, is unanimous. The right of Brissell, a citizen of Stark county, who is interested in the war of tuberculosis, to sue the county commissioners also is upheld by the court.

Druggists to Appeal to Government.

The Ohio State Pharmaceutical Association has started a movement which is expected to include similar organizations in many, if not all, of the states. The plan as outlined contemplates an appeal to congress to meet with a delegation of druggists in order that the postal laws, so far as they relate to the drug trade, may be carefully gone over and such revisions as are found necessary made without delay. Acting in co-operation with the different pharmaceutical associations, it is expected, will be some of the manufacturers of articles for sale in drug stores which have been listed as under governmental ban by the postal laws as they exist at present.

Good Road Delegates Named.

President Jesse Taylor, of the Ohio Good Roads Federation, has appointed the following delegates to represent the federation at the National Road convention to be held in Cincinnati: I. H. Bowblitz, Toledo; F. Lawson Moore, Cincinnati; Archibald H. Huston, Columbus; H. K. Laird, Columbus; L. Taylor, Harden; Richard Sinclair, Columbus; A. Acton Hall, Piqua; William Stroop, Dayton; Will P. Blair, Cleveland; David Dunham, Lebanon; George L. Marvin, Columbus; Claude Clark, Jamestown.

Insurance Fees and Taxes.

Collections of fees and taxes of insurance companies operating in Ohio amounting to $531,104.04 were turned into the state treasury by State Insurance Commissioner Moore, bringing the total up to about $1,2[illegible]. The largest single payment was $116,004.80, from the Metropolitan Insurance Co. The Prudential paid $10[illegible] 242.36, the New York Life $56,261.07, the Equitable Life Assurance $42,333.07, the Travelers Insurance $27,771.43 and the Northwestern Life $28,621.56.

Judge Stewart Is Dead.

Gilbert H. Stewart, former judge of the circuit court, died at his home here. He had been seriously ill three days and in failing health for several months. Judge Stewart served two terms as circuit court judge from 1884 to 1894, when he retired on the bench here as chief justice of the circuit court. He was editor for a time of a law journal. For some years he occupied the chair of medical jurisprudence at Sterling Ohio Medical college and also was professor of federal practice at Ohio State university.

Prof. Watson Chosen President.

Officers for the ensuing year were chosen at the close of the annual meeting of the Ohio Academy of Science, which was in session two days in the physics building at Ohio State University. The next annual meeting will be held at Oberlin College. Prof. L. B. Watson, of Kenyon College, was chosen president of the organization. Vice presidents of the various departments of the academy are: Prof. Charles Brookover, of Buchtel College, department of zoology; Prof. F. O. Grover, Oberlin College, department of botany; August Foerste, Dayton, department of geology; Dr. T. C. Mendenhall, Ravenna, department of physics. Other officers chosen were: Prof. E. L. Rice, of Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, secretary; Prof. J. S. Hine, Ohio State University, treasurer; Prof. W. C. Mills, Ohio State University, librarian; Profs. L. B. Walton, E. L. Rice, J. S. Hines, S. J. Allan and C. G. Shetzer, members of the executive committee; Prof. W. R. Lazenby, Columbus, trustee; Prof. J. H. Shaffner, member publication committee.

Motorman Must Be Careful.

"The driver of a horse and wagon has equal rights with the company on the streets," said Judge William T. Spear of the supreme court in the syllabus of the court's decision, affirming the Jefferson county courts' award of damages to the heirs of a milkman who was run down and killed by a Steubenville and Wheeling Traction Co. car.

The court held that omission of a person driving a wagon across a street railway track to look for the approach of a car "is not in all cases and as a matter of law negligence which will defeat a recovery for injuries received in a collision." The court goes on to declare a street railway company can not throw all the burden of watchfulness to avoid collisions upon drivers, and if a motorman notices a smaller vehicle is about to cross the street it is his duty to check his car in order to avoid a collision.

May Extend Tax Law.

According to figures compiled by George A. Edge, of the state treasury department, $80,881.50 has been paid over as the state's share of the collateral inheritance tax collected during the past year throughout the state. Cuyahoga county contributed more than half of the total amount, $41,718.65 having been paid over to the state from there. Hamilton county was second with $8,156.

The collateral inheritance tax, which provides for the payment of 5 per cent of all indirect inheritances, has been effective since 1908. There is a possibility of the next legislature amending the present law to provide for a tax on all inheritances. It is estimated that such a law would increase the state's annual revenues by $1,000,000 and more. The present law provides for the tax only on inheritances going to indirect relatives.

Boiler Law Held Good.

Advantages of the new boiler inspection law passed by the last general assembly and effective since July 1 are cited by the head of the department, Charles H. Wirmel, in his annual report to Gov. Harmon. During the year there were three boiler explosions, costing the lives of three men and injury to one in boilers covered by the new state law. In the others, not covered by the law and much less numerous, there were four serious explosions, costing lives of four men and injury to 11. Fifty-nine boiler manufacturers have been registered under the new law to build "Ohio standard" boilers, 23 of which are Buckeye state concerns. The department maintains 10 general inspectors and 146 are qualified to serve in insurance service.

Board Makes Good Showing.

By figures being prepared as a part of the annual report of Fiscal Supervisor Brown of the board of administration, it is shown that the state, through the board, in 1913, has decreased its expenditures for eleemosynary institutions approximately $500,000 from the total of last year. This saving, it is explained, represents the result of a systematizing of the work while, at the same time, the institutional population has increased 157. In addition to the decrease in actual expenditures, the figures show that supplies on hand are valued at $100,000.

Alumni Hears the Governor Elect.

Governor-elect Cox made his first public appearance in Columbus since his election, when he made the principal address at the Franklin County Alumni Association's celebration of Ohio day in the Ohio State University gymnasium. He was the guest of the Alumni Association and spoke concerning the relation of the university to the state. More than 2,000 attended the celebration. Dean Edward Orton, Jr., also spoke.

Does Not Constitute Embezzlement.

Under a decision affirming Medina county courts it is held by the supreme court not to constitute embezzlement if a township treasurer converts public funds to his own use, provided he turns over the money with whose custody he is charged to his successor and it is a crime only if he is unable to repay the funds with which he was charged. The court overrules the exceptions of the prosecuting attorney of Medina county in the case of the state against Charles Gunkleman.

Holds for Hotel Patron.

If a patron of a hotel leaves the key of his room at the desk it is unnecessary for him to prove the hotel keeper was negligent in order to recover damages for loss of his personal effects. Proof of the loss is prima facie evidence of the liability of the innkeeper, section 5983, general code, not having modified this common law provision. This was held by the supreme court in the case of the Palace Hotel Co. at Cincinnati against Philip Medart of St. Louis.

LOWER TARIFF COMING

OUTLOOK FOR HARMONY IS GOOD AMONG DEMOCRATS.

If Business Is Disturbed, Republicans Must Be Blamed for Having Tied It and Politics So Closely Together.

The outlook for a reasonable harmony among the Democrats in their tariff views is, we are glad to say, encouraging. Those who have been predicting all sorts of trouble might be engaged in better business than that of trying to make their predictions come true. They would do well to remember that the people voted for tariff reform, that they expect to get it, and that they want it brought about with as little disturbance to business as may be. The real assailers of business, therefore, are not those who are proposing to revise the tariff but those who are doing what they can to enhance the difficulty of that work and to arouse distrust and apprehension.

For the conditions that now exist the Democrats are in no way responsible. If it is difficult to change our tariff without affecting business it is only because the Republicans have tied business and politics so closely together that it is no easy matter to effect a divorce between them. We believe that there are thousands of business men and manufacturers in the United States who would be glad to have business freed of all connection with politics. It ought to be possible for congress to legislate on tax matters without affecting the mental operations of the most timid business men. But as it is, we have wool and steel and cotton and sugar all related to government. The partnership is most costly both to business and the government. And, of course, it imposes a heavy burden on the people.

If men who get anything out of the tariff could save the campaign contributions made in return for tariff favors, save the cost of the lobby, and the countless other incidental expenses, they could well afford to surrender the tribute which they are now permitted to levy on the American people. But for the present the work is one of reducing the tariff to reasonably decent proportions. This can be done in such a way as to help all concerned. Industries will be more prosperous for being freer, and the people will be relieved of a vast tax which they now pay in increased prices at which domestic products are sold. Thus far nothing has happened which even tends to show that the Democratic leaders are not acting together and on reasonably satisfactory lines.

We do not think that much influence will be exerted by those who apparently hold the grossly immoral view that the Democratic party should repudiate its pledge to reduce tariff duties. These men seem to feel that the pledges were made simply to win the election and that with victory they should be laid away on the shelf. But tariff revision was a winning card only because the people favored it. The question therefore is whether the people shall have their wish. Those who have the welfare of the nation at heart, and who are not seeking a despicable party advantage, will do everything in their power to smooth the way for tariff revision. The marplots will try to make trouble, but we do not think that they will meet with much success.—Indianapolis News.

Not Afraid of Democracy.

It is rather significant that there is just now a tremendous rush of immigration to this country from Europe. The increase for the present year is so far some 217,000 over 1911. This does not look as if these newcomers, who are largely of the laboring class, have any great fear of a panic interrupting the present period of prosperity. These sturdy workers and peasants from the older countries may not be so adept as some of our Republican friends in spinning fine theories about the ruin of American industries through the election of a Democratic president, but they seem to have an extraordinary instinct for perceiving the approach of good or hard times. In 1907, the year of the Roosevelt panic, and in 1908 they left the country by the hundreds of thousands. Now they are coming back in great numbers. Evidently they don't read the Republican papers and their unsophisticated minds see busy days ahead. As political prophets they seem safer guides than the standpat forecasters.

Wilson a Good American.

It is of course in order to congratulate President-elect Wilson and this may be done graciously and without bitterness. He is a good American and a man of deep and broad learning. He has been a first-class university president. It is to be sincerely hoped that he will make an equally successful chief magistrate of the nation.—Wilmington (Del.) News.

Much Business, Little Politics.

Plenty of business and mighty little politics is the platform of the average American after election, whether his side won or lost. Believers in the tariff that fell from heaven and can be revised only by its friends will please remember that the bedlam stage of Democracy is over, that the tariff will stand considerable revision, or that the sources of good times are beyond the wisdom or the folly which is great of tariff makers or tariff smashers.—New York Sun.

One Party Wholly Responsible.

It is good that the Democrats have won both the senate and the house. We shall now have one party in full power and wholly responsible. That means resumption of sober, prudent government and the making of laws that can be defended because they will have to be.—Harper's Weekly.

A Harrowing Experience.

There was a man in our town
Who'd never seen a problem play.
He went one night—his hair was brown,
But when he left his hair was gray.

Perils of Overdelicacy.

"Hand it to the parson after the ceremony," he said, "but don't do it ostentatiously."

The best man followed instructions, but it seems that he performed his task too covertly, for the father of the bridegroom, after the pair had departed, believed that an omission had occurred and quietly pressed a banknote into the minister's hand. But he also was too secretive about it, and before the party broke up the bride's brother felt called upon to draw the minister aside and thrust a $10 bill upon him.

Old Landmark Gone.

The Blaine schoolhouse in Mars Hill up on the hill, the one James G. Blaine honored years ago by giving a bell, which still hangs in the belfry, is no more. It has been converted into a storeroom and moved to another site. A good many bright boys and girls, now old men and women, graduated from this historical building, and no doubt there is a feeling of sorrow as the old schoolhouse leaves the foundation it was builded upon years and years ago.—Kennebec (Me.) Journal.

A DOCTOR'S SLEEP
Found He Had to Leave Off Coffee.

Coffee and tea drinking being such an ancient and respectable form of habit few realize that the drug—caffeine—contained in coffee and tea, is one of the principal causes of dyspepsia and nervous troubles.

Without their usual portion of coffee or tea, the caffeine topers are nervous, irritable and fretful. That's the way with a whiskey drinker. He has got to have his dram "to settle his nerves"—habit.

To leave off coffee or tea is an easy matter if you want to try it, because Postum gives a gentle but natural support to the nerves and does not contain any drug—nothing but food.

Physicians know this to be true, as one from Ga. writes:

"I have cured myself of a long standing case of Nervous Dyspepsia by leaving off coffee and using Postum," says the doctor.

"I also enjoy refreshing sleep, to which I've been an utter stranger for 20 years.

"In treating dyspepsia in its various types I find little trouble when I can induce patients to quit coffee and adopt Postum."

Postum now comes in concentrated, powder form called Instant Postum. It is prepared by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water, adding sugar to taste, and enough cream to bring the color to golden brown.

Instant Postum is convenient; there's no waste; and the flavor is always uniform. Sold by grocers—45-cup tin 30 cts., 100-cup tin 50 cts.

A 5-cup trial tin mailed for grocer's name and 2-cent stamp for postage. Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.—Adv.

THE DECLINE IN FARMING

In eighty years the number of farmers in relation to other workers has decreased 47.3 per cent in the United States.

Nor need this cause wonder. During nearly the whole eighty years we have been pursuing an economic policy which could have no other effect.

Almost from the beginning of the republic it has been the policy of government to foster manufacturing at the expense of agriculture—and this in the very face of the historic fact that our quarrel with the mother country grew out of Great Britain's efforts to prevent the growth of our manufacturers by barring them from competition with her own. Before the beginning of the revolution our manufactures of iron, glass, copper, wool and timber were so flourishing that the manufacturing interests of the mother country demanded and received protection against them.

The drain of the protective tariff upon the farm during the last eighty years has been fabulous, running into the thousands of millions. Capital which under normal conditions would have been invested in agriculture has been diverted into fostered industries, and in these industries the stupendous fortunes of the Rockefellers, the Havemeyers, the Fricks, the Carnegies, the Walshes, the Guggenheims, the Morgans and the Armours have been built up. In making possible these enormous and really dangerous accumulations we have so depleted the normal gains of the farmer that he has been forced to quit the plow and to enter the workshop, the mine or the factory.

The "back to the land" movement is one which cannot go far as long as the existing system shall prevail. The great rewards are not to be gained today in cultivating the soil. Yet the soil never yielded more bountifully, it was never richer, never before was the farmer able to secure such an increase from the sown seed. The trouble does not lie in the niggardliness of nature nor yet in the incapacity or sloth of the husbandman. It lies rather in those subtle laws which reach into the storehouse of the farmer and take from it an ever-increasing tribute for the enrichment of a favored few who render no equivalent.

Men will go back to the land fast enough without any other invitation if we allow them the natural rewards of labor expended on the soil. Farm labor in proportion to other labor is steadily declining because it is unjustly burdened. It is unjustly burdened not merely by the tariff, it is unjustly burdened in the matter of local taxes. Were the farmers taxed only on the bare land value, improvements being exempt, the "back to the land" movement would quickly become one of the challenging facts of our economic life.

WHAT IS A CRIMINAL CONSPIRACY?

It is admitted that the railroad coal companies own or control 86 per cent of the coal mined in the Pennsylvania anthracite field, where the total production exceeds 80,000,000 tons a year. Through contracts with independent operators they control an even larger proportion, and all coal moved to market must pay freight rates to railroads that own or control over six-sevenths of the coal mined.

Here is a practical working monopoly of a necessary of life in the hands of a small group of powerful railroad interests, one of which is in actual possession of over six-tenths of the possible supply of that necessary of life.

Under this ironclad arrangement the prices of coal to the consumer have rapidly risen through a short period of years. For fifteen years, in spite of improvements in transportation and economies of operation, freight rates on coal have remained fixed and always high.

Nothing can be done to make coal cheaper, says the Coal-Railroad Trust, because it would interfere with dividends. Nothing can be done to make freight rates cheaper, the Coal-Railroad Trust says, because it would interfere with dividends. If this is not a criminal conspiracy in restraint of trade, what is a criminal conspiracy?—N. Y. World.

STOP! LOOK! LISTEN!

It behooves members of congress to be on guard. The big financiers who are behind the Aldrich currency scheme are planning to rush the bill through congress at the short session which convenes in December. It must be prevented. The Aldrich bill includes the two things for which Wall street has been planning for nearly twenty years, namely, an asset currency and complete control of the business of the country. An asset currency would enable the banks to make a double profit on their money—they would first loan their money and then use the notes of borrowers as a basis for bank note circulation, and then their organized control of the financial world would be made absolute by the central bank system proposed. The reformation of the currency should be postponed until the new congress meets and then it can be undertaken by democrats according to the democratic theory which puts the responsibility upon the government instead of the banks. The currency can be given all the elasticity it needs without increasing the privileges of the banks or the influence of Wall street.—Bryan's Commoner.

George W. Perkins and Frank A. Munsey both invested a fortune in the political fortunes of Theodore Roosevelt this year. The contributions of Mr. Perkins made a total of $2[illegible],000, $122,500 to the expenses of the pre-convention canvass, $1[illegible] to the national progressive committee and $10,000 to the New York state committee. Mr. Munsey's total was $22[illegible], $118,[illegible] before the republican national convention and $[illegible] to the two [illegible] committees [illegible] $10,000 to the state committee. Other contributors to Col. Roosevelt's pre-convention campaign were [illegible] Hanna of Cleveland [illegible] and William [illegible] who gave $11[illegible]. [illegible] man can readily imagine [illegible] be said in progressive [illegible] now [illegible] had these contributors gone to advance the [illegible]. The largest single contribution to Woodrow Wilson's campaign was $10,000 and there were few as large as these. So the campaign of 1912 [illegible] into history.

RECORD OF CRIMINAL LIVES

Book Which Would Be Condemned Today Read by Men and Women a Few Generations Ago.

One of the scarce books which has to be sold at an approaching auction sale in this city bears this fascinating title: "The Lives of the Most Remarkable Criminals, Who Have Been Condemned and Executed, for Murder, Highway, House-Breakers, Street Robberies, Coining or Other Offenses, from 1720 to the Present Time." The "present time" referred to in this title was only the year 1735, so that the whole period covered by these thrilling and numerous criminal lives was only 15 years. It must have been a great time for criminals, for between the covers of the book are the stories of Jack Sheppard, Kennedy the Pirate, Jonathan Wild, Mrs. Griffin, Edward Burnsworth, William Hawkwick and several other quite celebrated criminals. Cheer up! Those were worse times than ours for criminality—and those were the days, too, when men and women were hanged for burglary, counterfeiting, sheep stealing and even poaching and smuggling.

An odd thing about that time, too, was that hundreds of books were printed which contained full and harrowing details of murder and robbery and that almost everybody, including clergymen and delicate ladies, read these books eagerly as fast as they came out. The oldest public libraries in New England contain in the book collections which were spread before the youth of the community many such criminal lives.—New York Mail.

Muscles and Brain

Experiments conducted by Mosso at Turin indicate that physical education and gymnastics serve not only for the development of the muscles but for that of the brain as well. It is becoming evident in the opinion of this authority that as much time should be devoted to muscular exercise as to intellectual exercise and that children should begin reading and writing only after they are nine years old.

Muscular fatigue exhibits phenomena identical with intellectual fatigue. Nerve cells show a tendency to rest every ten seconds. It is probable that only part of the brain is active at a time, the various parts relieve one another. The more mobile any animal's extremities are, the more intelligent, other things being equal, it is.—Harper's Weekly.

Be Joyously Useful.

Efforts to be permanently useful must be uniformly joyous—a spirit all sunshine; graceful from very gladness, beautiful because bright.—Carlyle.

MISTAKE THAT IS GENERAL

Too Often Time Is Wasted Considering Difficulties Instead of Performing Allotted Task.

When a hard thing is to be done the natural inclination of most of us is to allow ourselves to think of the effort necessary to do it, instead of going ahead and doing it.

When one is confronted by a severe task of duty which seems almost beyond one's powers, it is fatal to pause to consider its difficulties.

Never mind how hard it may seem, nothing can be tolerated in the mind except the consideration of ways of accomplishing it.

The secret of accomplishment lies in the answer of the urchin who was asked if he thought he would get the woodchuck for which he was energetically digging: "Get him? Why, man, I've got to get him; the minister's coming to dinner and there ain't no meat in the house!"

It is a wise economy in daily life to train the mind to take the attitude of determination in the beginning; to be deaf to the self which insists upon dwelling upon difficulties, and at once to bring into action the self that is determined to succeed.

Most persons have had the experience of looking back over an accomplished task with amused surprise at the exaggerated idea they entertained of it beforehand. Do the thing first and consider its difficulty afterward.

NEW IN THE TEXTBOOK LINE

Italian Meant Well, But His Knowledge of American Schoolbooks Was Small.

One morning, just as a teacher up in Harlem was entering her school, she was met in the hall by an Italian leading his little daughter by the hand.

"She wan' go school," said he politely, indicating the little girl. He pushed the child forward. "She wan' go school," he repeated, with many bows. "She has book," pointing to the book under the girl's arm, "an' she wan' go school."

"I see," said the teacher. "You have brought her all prepared. Can she read?"

The only response from the father was a shake of his head and a reiterated, "She wan' go school."

Whereupon the teacher took the book and looked at it. It was old and worn, and neither a reader nor an arithmetic. It was a social directory of the year 1909.

Floral Death Legends.

"By the Mexicans marigolds are known as death-flowers, from an exceedingly appropriate legend that they sprang up on the ground stained by the life-blood of those who fell victims to the love of gold and cruelty of the early Spanish settlers. Among the Virginian tribes, too, red clover was supposed to have sprung from and to be colored by the blood of the red man slain in battle with the white invaders. In a similar manner, the red poppies which followed the plowing of the field of Waterloo were said to have sprung from the blood of the killed and wounded in that famous battle. According to tradition, the Danish invasion is the cause of the Dane-weed, a coarse, asteraceous plant common in England, as it sprang from the blood of Danes slain in battle, and, if cut on a certain day in the year, it bleeds. The dwarf elder, for the same reason, is called Danewort and Dane's blood."—Suburban Life.

What Alaskan Dogs Eat.

Dogs in Alaska, when on the trail, are fed once a day, after the day's work is done. They are never fed in the morning, for if they were they would be lazy all day, or, what is more probable, would vomit up their breakfast soon after they got on the trail. Dogs, to work well, must be well fed, and it is false economy to underfeed a dog. They are fed on a variety of foods, including rice, tallow, corn meal and fish. If rice or corn meal forms a part of their food it must be cooked. Some men prefer to feed their dogs on bacon or fish, thus doing away with cooking. Cooked food is cheaper and more fattening than raw food, but the question as to whether dogs can work better on cooked or uncooked food is one that will never be settled so long as there are "mushers" to argue the question.

Will the Films Stop War?

The cinematograph as an institution has come to life since the last important war. It remains to be seen how a battle or the awful fringes of a battle will look upon the screen. For assuredly films will come into play. Soldiers have always said—and correspondents have in a measure agreed with them—that the truth of war cannot be told. How if the truth of war were now to be seen?

The late Colonel Stanley has photographs (daguerreotypes they would perhaps be called) of the dead and wounded taken after the Crimean engagements but they were too horrible for exhibition. He showed them, long afterwards, to those who could bear it, sometimes to those who could not—and they will never forget them.

Her Fervor.

"So you have won the American heiress, after all," observed the friend.

"Yes," fervently replied the foreign nobleman, "she is mine—a gold mine."

Why, the Idea!

"I'm surprised at your giving that small, hot bedroom I slept in to a relative," sniffed her maiden aunt, as she entered the breakfast room. "You are?" answered Mrs. Randall. "Why, auntie, we've given that room to servants."—Life.

Numbered.

"I suppose it's true," sighed Miss Wallon, "that the hairs of one's head are numbered. I know that this is the eighty-fourth one I've lost since the middle of April."

BLACK LETTERS AND WHITE

Former Is Better Because It Can Be Read at a Greater Distance Than the Latter.

There is a tendency on the part of railroads to adopt signs with white letters on a black background, not realizing that the black letter on a white background is easier to read and can be seen at a greater distance. This follows in an interesting way from the structure of the retina of the eye.

The impression of a letter at the limit of vision is received on the ends of a small bundle of nerves which convey to the brain a sort of mosaic impression. A nerve can only transmit to the brain information as to whether or not a ray of light is falling upon it, and when a nerve is partly in the light and partly in darkness the sensation is the same as though all of it was in the light.

It follows, therefore, according to the Scientific American, that all nerves on the dividing edge between any black and white area transmit the sensation of light so that all white lines and white areas appear wider and all black lines and black areas appear narrower than they really are.

Black letters grow thinner at the limit of vision and are still recognizable, while at the same distance white letters grow thicker and cannot be distinguished. There are circumstances when it is necessary to use white letters, but in such cases legibility will be improved if they are made with a thin stroke and strongly lighted. Black letters are more distinct if made with a heavy stroke.

NOGI ORDERED TO MARRY

Japanese Hero Took Bride Practically at the Command of His Superior Officer.

The Countess Nogi was a woman no less remarkable in many ways than her famous husband. The circumstances of her marriage with Nogi, when he was a brilliant young officer, are unusual in the extreme, especially in Japan.

She was the daughter of Sadayoki Yoji, and one day she was sitting in the window of her father's house in Tokyo watching the troops march past, when she saw a gallant young officer in command and immediately fell in love with him. Her father found it out and found out who the officer was, and later Nogi was approached to bring about a match.

He would not hear of it, as he had dedicated his life to the nation and did not intend to marry. But the young lady would not endure this attitude and her father approached one of the high officers, a superior of Nogi's, and this officer fell in with the idea at once, saying the match would be most suitable and it was just what Nogi should do.

The word was given from above to the young officer, and Nogi practically married Miss Yoji at the command of his superior officer. The union turned out to be an ideal one, as the subsequent history of the pair and their two brave sons has proved. The Count and Countess Nogi are regarded by the nation as the most exemplary couple that could be found anywhere. She was every inch as much a Samurai as he was.—Tokyo correspondence of London Standard.

Unused Doors.

With slight trouble and small expense an unused door may be most advantageously converted into a bookcase by having a carpenter set up a vertical board on each side of the door jamb and upon these boards—to the saving of the door-frame itself—nail the cross-pieces upon which the book-shelves are to rest. Then have your woodwork painted or stained to match the door behind it, and hang a curtain of canton flannel, denim, or a more ornamental and serviceable material from a rod fastened just inside the door-jambs, if the recess be good and deep; if shallow, as the door-settings are apt to be in our newer houses, have the rod fastened across the outside of the door-recess. A door thus treated will accomodate a surprising number of books.

Cast-Iron Magnets.

The difficulty of making good cast-iron permanent magnets has been overcome by a very simple process. The iron casting, after being machined to the required dimensions, is heated in a gas furnace until the iron can just be handled without distortion through softening.

It is then plunged in a chemical bath, which removes superfluous materials and leaves the iron clean. Finally it is magnetized by means of electric coils.

In strength of field, cast-iron magnets are from ten to fifteen per cent inferior to those of steel, but they are equal in magnetic permanence, and cost, for intricate patterns, only one half as much as steel magnets.

Hairpin Box.

One may obtain the most charming and at once the most useful hairpin box which has been shown for many a day. It is made entirely of dark tortoise shell and stands about three inches high and five inches long. The little top opens to hold one's else hairpins, and, without closing this, there may be opened at the same time two lower trays, in the manner of bureau drawers. It will distinctly appeal to the woman who must dress in a hurry and for whom attractive toilet articles have a strong claim.

Classical Music.

"What is your idea of classical music?" "Well," replied Mr. Cumrox, "I don't profess to know much about it. But it always seems to me that when a man writes classical music he simply takes a tune and sees how much he can muss it up."

As to the Poor.

The poor may not be getting poorer, but they are certainly getting less satisfied with their poverty.

ORDINANCE No. 880

An Ordinance to Provide for the Issue of Bonds of the City of Painesville in the sum of Five Thousand (5000) Dollars to Purchase Additional Equipment for and to Extend the Lines of the Electric Light Department.

Be it ordained by the Council of the City of Painesville, State of Ohio, two-thirds of the members elected thereto concurring:

Section 1. That it is deemed necessary by the Council of the City of Painesville, State of Ohio, to issue and sell the bonds of said City in the sum of Five Thousand (5000) Dollars for the purpose of purchasing additional equipment for and of extending the lines of the Electric Light Department of said City.

Section 2. [illegible] the authority of Section 3939 of the General Code of the State of Ohio, authorizing the issue of bonds by municipal corporations, bonds of the city of Painesville, State of Ohio, be issued in the sum of Five Thousand (5000) Dollars for the purpose of purchasing additional equipment for and extending the lines of the Electric Light Department of said City.

Section 3. That, whereas by Ordinance No. 879 duly passed April 29th, 1912, said City authorized the issue of bonds numbers 589, 590 and 591 in the sum of Five Hundred (500) Dollars each, and whereas said bonds were not issued, now therefore,

Said bonds as provided for in this ordinance shall be designated Electric Light and Extension Bonds, shall be of the denomination of Five Hundred (500) Dollars each, shall be numbered 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, and 598, shall be dated October 1, 1912 and shall mature as follows: Nos. 589 and 590 on October 1, 1919, Nos. 591 and 592 on October 1, 1920, Nos. 593 and 594 on October 1, 1921, Nos. 595 and 596 on October 1, 1922, and Nos. 597 and 598 on October 1, 1923. Said bonds shall be payable at the office of the City Treasurer in the City of Painesville, State of Ohio, and shall bear interest at the rate of five (5) per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, evidenced by coupons attached thereto, at the same place.

Section 4. Said bonds shall express upon their face the purpose for which they were issued and a citation of the law and the ordinance by which they were authorized. They shall be prepared, issued and delivered under the direction of the Finance Committee of the Council and the City Auditor. They shall be signed by the Mayor of said City and by the City Auditor and shall be sealed with the corporate seal of said City. The interest coupons attached to said bonds shall be executed by the City Auditor with his signature thereto or he shall have his signature printed or lithographed thereon. Said bonds shall be recorded [illegible] of the Trustees of the Sinking Fund in the name of the purchaser and shall bear interest as aforesaid.

Section 5. Said bonds shall first be offered at par and accrued interest to the Trustees of the Sinking Fund in their official capacity. If the Sinking Fund Trustees refuse to take any or all of said bonds at par and interest, then said bonds not so taken shall be offered at par and accrued interest to the Board of Commissioners of the Sinking Fund of the City School District. If said Board of Commissioners also refuse to take any of all said bonds at par and interest then said bonds not so taken shall be advertised for public sale and sold in the manner provided by law but not for less than their par value and accrued interest.

Section 6. That the proceeds from the sale of said bonds, except the premiums and the accrued interest thereon, shall be placed in the City Treasury to the credit of the Electric Light Fund and shall be disbursed upon proper vouchers to pay for certain equipment and to extend the lines of the Electric Light Department and for no other purpose.

Section 7. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and legal publication.

ELBERT F. BLAKELY,
Pres. of the Council.

FRANK L. KELLY,
Clerk.

Approved:

ORIGINAL INTERNATIONAL EVERLASTING

A PROGRESSIVE NEWSPAPER

Springfield Republican

MASSACHUSETTS

HONESTLY DEVOTED TO THE SERVICE OF THE PEOPLE

Independent of Selfish Political, Personal or Financial Influences

COURAGEOUS, ENTERPRISING, INTERESTING

ESTABLISHED IN 1824 BY SAMUEL BOWLES

DAILY (morning) $8. SUNDAY $2. WEEKLY $1 a Year

The Springfield Republican stands for political progress and social justice. It has stood for these causes consistently and strongly during the 88 years of its career. It stands also for honesty in all of the relations of life, personal, political, commercial, industrial, national and international. It considers that honesty is an essential basis of real political progress and social justice. It refuses to follow popular leaders who lack this fundamental virtue, however captivating and eloquent.

The Republican has a profound faith in democratic institutions, but it recognizes clearly that the safeguard of a progressive democracy is universal education, developing an enlightened electorate which may deal justly with the difficult problems that modern civilization presents. It looks forward, through the agency of such an electorate, to an increasing restraint of the aggrandizing activities of powerful individuals and groups, to the end that there may be a juster distribution of the fruits of labor and a fuller realization of the ideal of the commonwealth.

The Republican seeks to embody its principles in its own service to the people as a newspaper. It strives ever to deal with its public honestly in its presentation of the news of the day. It tells no fakes to promote its sales. It aims to educate, to enlighten and uplift its readers, and yet to interest and entertain them by honest methods. Its editorial page is one of the strongest, keenest, broadest in the country. It deals with all the subjects that concern humanity in the spirit of helpfulness, of healthier, happier living.

The Republican gives a news service that is real, not flashy. It commands the best agencies for its general news, often supplemented by special correspondence. It covers its home territory with remarkable thoroughness, and it devotes large and expert attention to all of the healthy outdoor sports. It gives liberal treatment to literature and to the arts, sciences and industries. The Sunday Republican is especially rich in delightful literary and other diverting features and departments.

THE WEEKLY REPUBLICAN

Presents in 16 broad pages the best editorial, literary and special features of the seven daily issues, with carefully edited and rewritten summaries of the important news of the week. It is an excellent home journal for intelligent people who wish to keep abreast of the best thought of the times, as well as of the news of the day, and it costs only ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

MENTOR

The ground is bare and grass very green, some of the late flowers like pansies and chrysanthemums are still in blossom, and the air is really quite balmy today. Such pleasant weather is a great blessing for the people who have not been able to get in their winter's supply of coal, and for those of our farmers who still have outside work left undone. While many people are half sick with colds, most everybody is hoping for a continuance of this kind of weather until Christmas at least, if not all winter.

Rev. F. I. Dunbar and Mrs. Dunbar of Lisbon, this state, came up to spend Thanksgiving with their daughter, Mrs. T. P. Cadle, and remained the rest of the week.

Mrs. Clark Bradway was with her mother in North Girard, Pa., last week.

Mrs. Charles Hart of Sandusky, spent a day or two here with her husband's father, Mr. T. G. Hart and family recently.

The families of Messrs. T. D. and N. W. Morley spent Thanksgiving up in the city with their oldest sister, Mrs. Notting and her family.

Thanksgiving Day was celebrated by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Case and Miss Frances Cleveland, by taking dinner with Mrs. Elizabeth Munson and her daughter.

Mrs. Florence Northcott has been on the sick list, and her place in the Central Telephone Station has been occupied by Mrs. Frank Sandberg.

Mr. and Mrs. N. C. Frost were guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Laird and their family at Ashtabula for two or three days last week.

Mr. William Bow, who recently bought the King place in West Mentor, is building a bungalow near the west line of the place, and has engaged Mr. Pixley for the year, who will have the first use of the new house.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Bixby of Mayville, N. Y., have been visiting their aunt, Mrs. John Tyler and their cousins Mrs. E. H. Barber and Mrs. Lena Aldrich in Painesville this past week.

Karl Justus was at home from Case School for the recess of last week.

Mrs. F. H. Babcock and daughter of Cleveland, spent Saturday with Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Parker.

Mr. James R. Garfield has called a meeting of the Library Association to be held this week Friday evening to consider matters of importance.

Mr. Howard Smith of Colorado Springs, Colo., spent the past week with the family of Mr. Chas. Johnson at the Center, while on route to Washington, D. C.

Mr. and Mrs. N. W. Morley with their two little children, are expecting to leave here tomorrow evening for their winter home in Mt. Dora, Florida.

Mrs. Lizzie McCrae Parshall has been very sick while down on the Plains on a visit to her uncle, Mr. Edgar Gunn and his family, and her mother had to be sent for to care for her; but she is better at this writing.

Mrs. Robert Case had a visit from her friend, Miss Bode over Sunday, and we understand that Miss Bode is the teacher of German in the city schools of Cleveland.

Mrs. Charles Lamb of Unionville, together with her daughter, Miss Helen, is spending some time here with her son, Mr. Harry Lamb and his family.

Mrs. George Bliss and her daughter, Mrs. E. Sawyer, entertained for several days Mr. and Mrs. Edward Parshall of Akron, and their daughters, Miss Gladys and Miss Inez, both of them teachers in the Akron public schools, and their youngest son, Don, also the family of Mr. Will Sawyer.

Mrs. Maurice Markell and little son, of Willoughby, have been over here for two or three days with Mrs. Eva McCrae.

The ladies of the Disciple church decided to hold their bazaar in the Maccabee Hall instead of the church building, as was at first planned, and instead of serving a supper, will have good things to sell, like pressed chicken, cakes and such things.

Mr. and Mrs. Bradway had their family all together on Thanksgiving Day, for Mr. and Mrs. Welcome Hardendorf were down from the city, and Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Freeman and their three small sons, making a jolly company.

Mr. and Mrs. John Tyler took dinner in Painesville on Thursday with their niece, Mrs. Ed Barber and her family.

Miss Helen Rexford of Cleveland and her brother have been spending a few days here with their grandmother, Mrs. Eliza Rexford.

Messrs. Byron and Gilbert Carpenter, two of our Mentor boys who are attending school at the Ohio State University, were at home from Wednesday evening until Sunday afternoon enjoying the vacation.

Mrs. Ben Warren has again been on the sick list and unable to take her place on the Miscellany Club program on Wednesday last.

Mr. and Mrs. Ben Reutenik entertained over Thanksgiving Day quite a few relatives and friends from the city.

There has been no opportunity for drawing books from the village library since a week ago today, as the furnace has [illegible] until a new one [illegible] from Rochester, N. Y. [illegible]

The ladies of the Methodist church [illegible] over the bazaar [illegible] held last week, for they [illegible] on the supper [illegible] besides [illegible] other things and will clear [illegible] quite a hundred dollars towards the much coveted pipe organ.

The Misses Nellie and Mary Rexford have been having a visit from their mother's brother, Mr. Healy and his wife, whose home is in Greenwich, Ohio, and also from their Cleveland cousins, Mr. John McKay and family of Lakewood, one of the suburbs of Cleveland.

The initial "Mothers' Meeting" was held this afternoon in the Council Chamber of the Village Hall, as the Library building could not be made comfortable with just a grate fire. There were twenty mothers and others who were sympathizers with the movement, present and the closest attention was paid to Miss Wild of Lake Erie College, who was the speaker of the afternoon; the meeting being presided over by Mrs. Chas. Church. Among other pertinent questions, Miss Wild asked "Should not women be as interested in juvenile education, as in juvenile courts? Is there any way in which women can show their interest in civic affairs more than in co-operation with the teachers of the public schools?" Of Club women, she asked what they had done towards improving the health equipment of school buildings or towards bettering sanitary conditions? The Chicago Clubs were asking "Is the air in your child's school good, and is it changed often? How is the air moistened, if at all? Does your child sit in a seat that is the right size for him?" (adding that curvature of the spine was often caused by children sitting in seats not the right size). They also ask questions about the lighting of the schoolroom, as to the drinking water, the proper dusting and general cleanliness of the rooms where children have to spend so much of their lives, etc. Now all of these questions are right and proper, school boards do the best they know how, but a little help from parents would go a long ways. Of the army of American school children (some twenty millions of them) many have poor teeth, poor sight, or are not properly fed so as to be sufficiently nourished. Miss Wild declared that we could not lay the bad condition of things to the presence of foreigners in our schools, for the German children led all the rest in scholarship, while statistics showed that our American born children, which includes the Mountain Whites, are the most illiterate of all. The meeting was a great success, and is the first of a series that will surely do much good.

The Methodist Sunday School is to hold its "White Gift" service in its own Sunday School rooms on the morning of the Sabbath before Christmas, and instead of the regular lesson, while on Monday evening the 23d the public are to be invited to a program in the church given by the Sunday School consisting of a sort of Christmas dialogue or drama, much music etc.

Mrs. Payson Carroll went to Painesville for Thanksgiving dinner with her son, Mr. Raymond Carroll and his family.

The Miscellany Club met on Wednesday last with the King sisters, where the usual program was enjoyed. Mrs. George Marsh read a very delightful paper on "Home life in other lands." Mrs. Heath followed with a most instructive paper entitled "Who is to blame for the high cost of living" and plainly showed that the middle-man would have to be cut out. Roll call was responded to by Thanksgiving thoughts. The next meeting is to be with Mrs. George House. Mrs. Albert Hanson sent from Winnipeg her resignation which was regretfully accepted, and Mrs. Dr. Clark was elected to her seat in the Club.

California Woman Seriously Alarmed

A short time ago I contracted a severe cold which settled on my lungs and caused me a great deal of annoyance. I would have bad coughing spells and my lungs were so sore and inflamed I began to be seriously alarmed. A friend recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, saying she had used it for years. I bought a bottle and it relieved my cough the first night, and in a week I was rid of the cold and soreness of my lungs," writes Miss Marie Gerber, Sawtelle, Cal. For sale by all dealers.

Man First Carved Women.

A piece of stone, 18 inches high, on which is roughly cut in bas-relief the figure of a woman, is the oldest known representation of the human form. It was discovered by Dr. Lalanne in excavations in the grottoes of Laussel, France, and is thought to be 20,000 years old. Scientists believe that it came between the ages of the mammoth and the reindeer, when the artist would have used sharpened flints as tools.

Man Coughs and Breaks Ribs

After a frightful coughing spell a man in Neenah, Wis., felt terrible pains in his side and his doctor found two ribs had been broken. What agony Dr. King's New Discovery would have saved him. A few teaspoonsful ends a late cough, while persistent use routs obstinate coughs, expels stubborn colds or heals weak, sore lungs. "I feel sure it's a God-send to humanity," writes Mrs. Effie Morton, Columbia, Mo., "for I believe I would have consumption today, if I had not used this great remedy." It's guaranteed to satisfy, and you can get a free trial bottle or 50-cent or $1.00 size at Gehring's Pharmacy.

SYNOPSIS.

Harding Kent calls on Louise Farrish to propose marriage and finds the house in great excitement over the attempted suicide of her sister Katharine. Kent starts an investigation and finds that Hugh Crandall, suitor for Katharine, who had been forbidden the house by General Farrish, had talked with Katharine over the telephone just before she shot herself. A torn piece of yellow paper is found, at sight of which General Farrish is stricken with paralysis. Kent discovers that Crandall has left town hurriedly. Andrew Elser, an aged banker, commits suicide about the same time as Katharine attempted her life. A yellow envelope is found in Elser's room. Post Office Inspector Davis, Kent's friend, takes up the case. Kent is convinced that Crandall is at the bottom of the mystery. Katharine's strange outcry puzzles the detectives. Kent and Davis search Crandall's room and find an address, Lock Box 17, Ardway, N. J. Kent goes to Ardway to investigate and becomes suspicious of a "Henry Cook." A woman commits suicide at the Ardway Hotel. A yellow letter also figures in this case. Kent calls Louise on the long distance telephone and finds that she had just been called by Crandall from the same booth. "Cook" disappears. The Ardway postmaster is missing. Inspector Davis arrives at Ardway and takes up investigation. He discovers that the dead woman is Sarah Sacket of Bridgeport. Louise telephones Kent imploring him to stop the investigation. Kent returns to New York to get an explanation from Louise. He finds the body of a woman in Central Park and more yellow letters. He sees Crandall, whom he recognizes as "Cook," enter the Farrish home. Louise again implores Kent to drop the investigation and refuses to give any explanation. Later Kent sees Crandall and Louise in an automobile. Kent returns to Ardway. Davis announces that he has planned to arrest the missing postmaster and also the master criminal. While seeking the criminals Kent comes across Louise and Crandall. Pursued by Davis the postmaster jumps off a precipice and is killed. Aleck Young, the master criminal, is found in a hut in a morphine stupor.

CHAPTER XIII

The Strange Vigil.

Dawn found Inspector Davis and me keeping strange vigil in the deserted cottage. Louise was gone. Crandall was gone. Constable Dodds was gone. Only the two of us were there and on a rude couch in the corner, inert, unconscious with the deathlike stupor of the confirmed user of morphine lay the wreck of a man whom Davis had termed the master criminal.

On the inspector's return from his pursuit of the postmaster he had at once assumed the position of director general of the little group at the cottage. He had decreed that Crandall should take Louise back to town in the automobile as soon as she was able to travel.

"After she has had an hour's rest here," he said authoritatively, "her nerves will have recovered sufficiently. It is important that the wound in her arm should be dressed as quickly as possible. It will be well, too, for her to return as speedily as possible to her father and sister. Her continued absence, if it reaches their ears, will needlessly alarm them both. You, Mr. Crandall, will take her back in the machine in which you came, of course."

"Certainly," said Crandall—over eagerly, I thought—"but, if you will pardon me for asking, who are you?"

For reply Davis handed him his card which bore his official title.

"But," stammered Crandall, "I don't understand you. What are you doing out here?"

"I'm here," said the inspector, "I fancy on the same mission that brought both you and Kent here—to find the sender of the yellow letters that have been menacing the peace and happiness of the house of Farrish."

"But," protested Crandall again, "how did you know it was Aleck Young?"

"So you know him?" said the inspector, with a note of inquiry in his voice.

I had been taking no part in the conversation that was carried on. I was sitting with Louise's head pillowed on my knee endeavoring with my handkerchief to staunch the slight flow of blood that was still coming from the bullet wound. I had been strongly tempted to voice a protest, when I heard Davis arrange for Louise's return in the automobile with Crandall, for while Davis seemed to think he like ourselves had been in pursuit of the criminals I still believed it was for the purpose of warning them instead of capturing them. Yet, on the other hand, I knew nothing about running a car. It was clearly out of the question for me to take Louise back, much as I distrusted Crandall. Anxiously I waited for his confession of acquaintance with the man in the hut.

"Yes, I know him—only too well," said Crandall.

"Tell me about him," said the inspector. "But wait. Let us carry Miss Farrish inside the cottage where she will be sheltered from the night air until you are ready to start."

"I can walk," said Louise. "It isn't—I think I was more frightened than hurt."

I helped her to her feet and assisted her into the cottage, while I piled some cushions that were lying about and made her comfortable. The noise of our entrance made no impression on the drug-stupefied man who lay on the other side of the room but Davis and Crandall crossed to where he lay and examined him closely.

"He will not wake for several hours," said Davis after feeling his pulse. "Kent and I will stay here until then. You, Mr. Crandall, will take Miss Farrish home, and you, Dodds, as soon as it's daylight, had better go look for Rouser's body."

"I don't have to look for it," said the constable with a shudder. "I know just where it is. It's a long ways round by the road, though."

"Take the buckboard," said Davis, "and when you reach the body go through all the pockets carefully and bring me everything you find. You'd better not take the body back to Ardway yet. Is there some place else you can take it?"

"Sure," said Dobbs, "I can take it over to Millervale. It's just about as far in the other direction. But what in the land's sake I'll tell about it, gets me."

"That's easy," said the inspector. "You can explain that you were driving over there and as you came by you saw the body lying on the road. You can explain that he must have fallen over the cliff in the dark. By the time they get through talking about it and having an inquest over in Millervale we will have had a chance to finish any more investigating we want to do. You can start about dawn."

"All right," said the constable, "but what will I do with them warrants?"

"Leave them with me. After you have disposed of Rouser's body you can stop on your way back and we'll take this one in with us. Come on outside, Dodds, and you, too, Crandall. I want to ask you some questions about our friend over there. You, Kent, stay here with Miss Farrish."

The three of them went out, leaving Louise and me alone together, a circumstance that I couldn't doubt that Davis had planned realizing that there was much we would say to each other. Hardly were they out of the door before Louise turned to me, with suppliant arms and cried out, with a sob in her voice. "Harding, forgive me for having deceived you."

"It is you," I cried, "you, who must forgive me for having disobeyed your wish, for having come out here after you had asked me not to, for having almost put a bullet through your dear heart."

"You didn't know—you couldn't know that I was here," she sobbed. "But how can you ever pardon the lies I told you?"

"Lies," I protested. "Dear girl, you never lied to me. Whatever these dear lips have said I knew. I always knew your heart was true."

"Katharine asked it and I had to promise her."

"You mean about Hugh Crandall?"

"Yes," she breathed. "I don't know yet what it is that is between them. It's something about—about my father. Crandall knew it and Katharine found it out. Whatever it is, they determined to keep it secret between them. Katharine made me promise that I would tell no one, not even you. She swore me not to reveal to anyone that I had even seen Hugh Crandall. I had to promise her, you understand, don't you?"

My answer was a kiss full on her lips, while my arms went about her and held her tight to me.

"Of course, dear girl," I breathed. "I understand. I understood all the while."

"I was so afraid," she murmured, "afraid you would think I was deceiving you, that I didn't love you."

As our lips met in a long, sweet kiss, a wave of joy swept over me that all but obliterated thoughts of the dreadful yellow letter. I forgot for the moment the drug-sodden creature lying in the corner, not twenty feet away from us.

The spell was broken by a slight twitching of the man across the room. We came to ourselves with a start as from a dream. I went over to his side and looked at him. He was still dead to all around him.

"You understand, Harding, dear, don't you?" said Louise, as I resumed my place beside her, "why I asked you to drop your search? As soon as Katharine became conscious and I told her that you were on the trail of the yellow letter, she became greatly excited. She insisted that I should make you withdraw at once. She was determined to know all about what you had done, and I told her of your being here in Ardway. She, weak and ill as she was, made me swear that I would recall you by telephone. She wanted me to telephone to Hugh Crandall, too, but I did not know how to reach him. I had to promise her everything she asked."

"Of course you did," I said. "But, dear, I loved you so that I could not rest while this terrible mystery that hung over your dear ones was unsolved. I felt that it was my duty to disregard your wish. I realized that you were being compelled by some influence you could not withstand to act as you did. You are not angry with me, are you, dearest?"

"Of course I'm not," she said with a wan smile, patting my hand gently.

"But tell me," I asked, "what of Hugh Crandall? What is his connection with this dreadful mystery?"

"I don't know," she answered thoughtfully.

"I have thought all along that he had something to do with it, and you saw just now that he admitted knowing this man here whom the inspector insists is at the root of everything."

"Katharine trusts him, yet I know my father for some reason forbade him the house."

"I'm sure he is guilty," I cried. "Katharine's eyes have been blinded by love to his real character."

"I think you must be mistaken," said Louise. "He knows about the existence of a paper that gave some man a strange hold on my father. Katharine knew of it, too. He may have told her. She insisted on my accompanying him out here to try to help recover it."

"Didn't he tell you about it on the way out?"

"No. I asked him what it was. He told me that too many people knew its contents now. The more I think about it the more perplexed I am about the mysterious manner in which both he and Katharine acted about this document."

"Tell me everything," I insisted, all my suspicion against Crandall returning anew.

"To begin with, he insisted on our leaving the chauffeur in Newark, though it had been my intention to have him come with us. Crandall would not hear of it. 'Katharine put you in my charge,' he said, 'and it is [illegible] take every precaution for secrecy. It is better that only you and I go on this mission. We want no servant gossiping about this matter.' 'But where are we going, and why?' I asked him. 'Surely I have a right to know that.' 'We are going to try to recover from the hands of the wickedest blackguard on earth a certain document that has come into his possession. It is a question whether or not we shall succeed. If we do, I shall put this document in your hands and you must promise that it shall not go out of your possession until you have placed it in your sister's hands. You must promise me, too, that you will ask no questions about it and that you will not read it. When Katharine has seen it, do with it whatever she tells you. She probably will say that you are to burn it without reading.'

"Can't you see, Harding, what a dilemma I was in? I felt that what Mr. Crandall asked me to do was Katharine's wish. They had talked together for nearly half an hour just before you came to the house. I had to promise what he asked, though I protested first. It seemed to me that carrying back the document to Katharine would excite her and retard her recovery, and I told him so."

"'The sight of that document safe in her own hands will do more to cure her speedily than all the doctors in the world,' he answered."

"Did he mean the yellow letter?" I queried.

"I don't know. I asked him if that was what he meant and he would not answer me. The only thing he did tell me was that there had been strange developments in the case since he had undertaken to get this paper for Katharine. They seemed to puzzle him greatly. He said that something with which he had nothing to do had alarmed the man we were going to see and that he had disappeared, gone into hiding."

"How will we find him?" I asked.

"'He is as anxious to see me as he is not to see some one else,' Crandall told me. He wrote me plain directions how to reach a place he calls the deserted cottage, and made an appointment there for nine o'clock tonight.'"

"Why," I asked Louise, "do you suppose that he and Katharine insisted on you coming out here? Why could not Crandall himself have recovered the document and restored it to Katharine?"

"I asked him that. He told me that the man who held it had made the condition that it should be received by either my father or Katharine. They did not wish it known that my fa— what had happened, and as they were certain this man knew neither Katharine nor me, I was to go with him and impersonate my sister."

"Did you get the document?"

"No, we failed," said Louise, "and I do not know what in the world I am to tell Katharine. We came out here in the afternoon. Crandall thought it advisable to find the place by daylight. We ran the automobile up the lane that leads to this place and crept through the thicket until we came in sight of the cottage. There were two men moving about in the cottage, Young and another man whom Mr. Crandall told me was the postmaster at Ardway. He seemed surprised at the presence of the postmaster. We watched for half an hour and then took the automobile back to a little hotel about three miles away from Ardway. For some reason, Mr. Crandall did not want to stop in Ardway."

"I guess I was the reason," I replied. "But when did you return here?"

"We had dinner at the little hotel, and as soon as it was dark, started back for the cottage. When we arrived we found a light in the window and saw Young there in a stupor just as you see him. The other man was nowhere around. After trying to awaken Young, without success, Mr. Crandall searched his clothes, but there was nothing in any of his pockets. He even felt all the seams, and took off his shoes in search of the paper we wanted, but it was nowhere on him. He ransacked the cottage as well as was possible in this dim light, but could not find any suggestion of a hiding-place. Out in the little shed that serves as a kitchen he found a slip on which was written a list of eatables—bread, milk, eggs and such things. We decided from this that the other man—Rouser, I think Mr. Crandall had said his name was—had gone to some neighboring farm-house or store to lay in supplies and probably would soon return. Mr. Crandall suggested our hiding in the bushes until his arrival, and we did so. We had hardly taken our place behind the bushes before we heard him coming. Mr. Crandall stepped out, and the rest is so mixed up I don't know just what happened. I heard shots and felt a pain in my arm and I think I screamed and then I don't remember any more until I found you bending over me."

"To think that it was my bullet that hit you!" I cried. "I might have killed you."

"It's only the lightest sort of scratch," she protested. "It doesn't even hurt any more. It does not bother me half so much as to know how to tell Katharine that we failed in our mission."

"Tell her," said I, "that one of the conspirators is dead and that the other is safe in the hands of Inspector Davis and myself. Tell her that any document either of us finds that in any way relates to her father will be placed in her hands at once. Tell her that I will not leave the prisoner's side until I have it safe and that my honor is pledged both for Davis and myself that no word affecting her father will ever become public. Crandall is out there now talking with Davis, and I think you will find that he, too, will tell her the same thing."

"Lies," I Protested. "Dear Girl, You Never Lied to Me."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Chances for the Student

No Reason Why Their Opportunities Should Not Be Extended in Many Directions.

We have student mechanics in all the large factories and student miners in all the great mines. There are student trainmen on all the trains and student superintendents in all the offices.

Soon we shall have student senators in the senate and student representatives in the house. A student judge will sit on every bench and student attorneys will assist every lawyer.

Student social learners will attend every function and student soldiers will accompany the troops. The White House will have to be enlarged to make room for about 1,000,000 student presidents, for nearly every mother in the United States will want to send her son to the White House to learn how to be president.

Student brides and student grooms will attend every wedding ceremony and student ministers will accompany the minister on his parochial calls.

It might be interesting to know just what a student lover's privilege would be, but there is no doubt that a few lessons are sadly needed by some young persons.

Student poets would with advantage learn the gentle art of standing off the landlady and student bill collectors would find it advantageous to learn how best to land at the bottom of the stairs.—Chicago News.

Electrical Devices.

Electric irons replace the sad iron, an electric pad is now used instead of the leaky hot water bottle, while an arrangement of wires attached to the bedroom clock and set for the usual breakfast hour assures the hurrying commuter that his oatmeal, toast, eggs and coffee will be steaming hot when he rises, giving him ample time to catch his morning train.

INDIVIDUAL ROAD RACING CHAMPION

Ralph De Palma, Champion Driver.

Ralph De Palma is the individual road racing champion of America for the season of 1912, and the car honors go to the Fiat, according to the finding of the jury of critics, which passes upon such things, the American Automobile association declining to undertake the task of picking title holders.

De Palma succeeds to the unofficial title, which in the past has been held by Harvey Herrick, Ralph Mulford and Bert Dingley, through having won four out of the five road races, in which he started last summer. Teddy Tetzlaff might be styled runner-up, because of his having won three firsts, while Harry Endicott is next with two.

The 1912 road racing season wound up with the running of the Phoenix desert events, and following the dropping of the curtain the results of the year have been summarized by C. G. Sinsabaugh, chairman of the contest board of the Chicago Automobile club, who makes his report in the Motor Age.

Critics will be surprised to find that 1912 wasn't so much of an "off" year as anticipated. There were twenty road races run as against twenty-seven in 1911. There were 156 entries in the twenty events, as against 202 the season previous, and the average number of starters was slightly in excess of 1911. The distances averaged greater, too, 232 as against 206. A better percentage of finishers, also, is reported, while the same number of makes of cars competed this year as last—forty-four.

UMPIRES SELECT ALL-STARS

Evans and Klem Tell Who They Think Are the Best Players in Their Respective Leagues.

Umpires in the major leagues are certainly in a good position to judge ball players. William Evans of the American league and Bill Klem of the National league have picked two all star teams, one representing what Evans thinks is the best in the younger organization and the other in the topliners to the mind of Klem in the National league. These selections express the opinion of the arbiters as to the worth of each ball player and how each man has helped his club throughout the present season.

The selection for the American league by Billy Evans is:

Catcher—Stanage, Detroit.
Pitcher—Johnson, Washington.
Shortstop—Wagner, Boston.
First Base—McInnis, Athletics.
Second Base—Collins, Athletics.
Third Base—Baker, Athletics.
Right Field—Cobb, Detroit.
Center Field—Speaker, Boston.
Left Field—Jackson, Cleveland.
Utility Infielder—Barry, Athletics.
Utility Outfielder—Milan, Washington.

That for the National league, by W. J. Klem is:

Catchers—Archer, Chicago; Meyers, New York.
Pitchers—Mathewson, Marquard and Tesreau, New York; Rucker, Brooklyn.
First Base—Daubert, Brooklyn.
Second Base—Doyle, New York.
Third Base—Zimmerman, Chicago.
Shortstop—Wagner, Pittsburg.
Outfielders—Bescher, Cincinnati; Magee, Philadelphia; Wilson, Pittsburgh; Schulte, Chicago.
Utility Infielder—Sweeney, Boston.

DIAMOND BELT TO WOLGAST

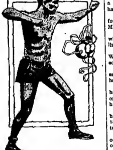
Champion Is Presented With Valuable Trophy by Tom McCarey, San Francisco Promoter.

Because of the unsatisfactory termination of the fight between Ad Wolgast and Joe Rivers for the lightweight championship on July 4, the diamond belt offered to the winner by Promoter Tom McCarey was withheld from the champion.



Champion Ad Wolgast.

McCarey since relented and as Wolgast was about to board a train for San Francisco, McCarey appeared and presented the champion with the belt, much to the surprise of the Cadillac battler. The belt, which is of solid gold and set with four large diamonds, is valued at $1,000.

Noted Sprinters May Visit U. S.

Louis Guertin, the professional all-round athlete of Boston, is to go to England to seek matches with Reggie Walker, Jack Donaldson or A. B. Postle, who rank among the world's speediest sprinters. All three are likely to come to the United States.

Miss Curtis Retains Title.

Miss Margaret Curtis, of Boston, won the national woman's golf championship for the third time on the Essex county links, defeating Mrs. Ronald H. Barlow, of Philadelphia, by a score of three up and two to play.

UNUSUAL HANDICAP IN GOLF

Extremely Nervous Player Unable to Play Good Game on Account of Anticipated Noise.

An unusual golf handicap was played on one of the local links recently, the proponent of the same winning hands down. One of the rules of golf is that one must not talk to a player when he is about to make a drive, nor must others discuss any subject in his hearing. It might take his mind off the game for just an instant and that might be fatal.

In Kansas City lives a crack but extremely nervous golf enthusiast. He had been in the habit of beating a fat and phlegmatic friend until the latter tired of it.

"I'll tell you what I'll do," the friend said not long ago. "I will play you eighteen holes if you will give me a handicap."

"Done," said the nervous player. "Name the handicap."

"Three times during the game, and not more than three, I am to be permitted to stand behind you and say 'Boo' while you are preparing to drive."

Every time it was the nervous man's play his fat friend walked up and just stood behind him. Never once during the game did the fat man say "Boo!" or anything else. But the anticipation at the expected "Boo!" was fairly nerve-shattering, and the fat man won hands down.—Kansas City Journal.

GOSSIP AMONG SPORTS

Carl Morris has come back to earth knocking out some poor dub.

It is hoped that there will be no protest of any Wisconsin or Minnesota players this year.

Football would be a great little sport, all right, if one could avoid the arguments afterward.

Ban Johnson is said to have offered Hank O'Day a fat salary to work in his league next season.

Bat Nelson is to be given a test, says a report. The sweer of Hegewisch has always been ready for that.

This seems to be a swell year for appointing shrimp managers. Note Miller Huggins and Johnny Evers.

Now billiards comes to the front with a wrangle. It was thought billiards came close to sportsmanship.

Bobby Byrne, the Pirate's third sacker, says he cleaned up $300 on the barnstorming trip the Pirates took.

Chief Bender was a big hero in 1911, he is mentioned for sale or trade in 1912. Fame is fleeting in baseball, too.

The only thing one can tell by odds on football games is that usually one school has more money than the other.

Morris Rath, the Sox's little second baseman, was the busiest toiler last season. Morris appeared in 157 games.

The worst of football is the deadly "what might have been" conversations one is obliged to listen to the next day.

Mordecai Brown may be out of the national pastime for keeps, but he will never be out of the hearts of the Chicago fans.

In the talk of a possible sale of the Buffalo International league club, it is stated that the price put on the property was $75,000.

It is easy to say that a football team is a good fighter as it is to say a person has a good heart—and that's the last thing one can say.

In an effort to boom his administration, friends of Miller Huggins are preparing a rough road for him by claiming the pennant for the Cardinals.

Evidently this visiting Japanese billiard player is as proficient in his profession as most of his countrymen are in their particular lines of work.

WENT AWAY WITH THE BOOTY

Elderly Irish Lady Proved She Was Quite Capable of Rising to the Occasion.

Lord Spencer, when viceroy of Ireland, used to keep open house, and all ladies and gentlemen who had attended drawing-rooms or levees had an unwritten right to attend the St. Patrick's day ball. [illegible] people used to present themselves.

Not contented with eating and drinking all they could, many persons used to make predatory raids on the tables and carry off eatables of all sorts. On one occasion the comptroller saw a stout, elderly lady take a whole fowl and stuff it with considerable deftness into a somewhat capacious silk and embroidered bag. He at once went up to her and pointing with his finger at the bag, said:

"Madam, won't you take some ham with that?"

The good lady was not in the least abashed, but replied:

"Ah, captain, sure it's a joker you are," and stuck to her booty.—From Sir Alfred Turner's Autobiography.

They Presented Arms.

Two very charming young ladies were chatting in a tramcar the other evening.

"So you've been down to the camp?" said one.

"Yes, and it's splendid down there."

"Did the soldiers have their arms with them?"

"Of course they did. You don't suppose they would leave them at home, do you?"

"I shouldn't like to be there when they were firing. I hate firing."

"Why, silly, they don't fire."

"Don't they? What do they do with their arms then?"

"Why, they put them round you, of course, and it's ever so nice."

Ample Sleeping Accommodations.

A man who owns a 160-acre farm in California has discovered the largest bedroom in the world. One day he hired a new hand and spoke to him very kindly, welcoming him to the meals at the family table and telling him he could have access to all the reading matter in the house.

"But where shall I sleep?" asked the new employe.

"Young man," said the farmer, "that is immaterial to me. You see about you one hundred and sixty acres, and any part of that land which looks good to you as a place to sleep is at your disposal."—Popular Magazine.

ALL ARE HAPPY HERE

City of Munich Is Loved by People for Itself Alone.

Even Americans Feel at Home and Are Not Stared at as Though They Were Curiosities—Noted Academy Here.

Munich.—In olden days when the people of Munich were starving an angel, disguised as a little child and dressed in the yellow and black garb of a monk, came down from heaven to help the people. Even to this day this little child, the Munchener Kinder, has been the symbol of the Munich people, and instills into them the true essence of peace and happiness. But it casts a magic hand over every stranger that enters its gates.

Munich has the faculty of spoiling all other places in the world for those who have once lived there. It is not beautiful like Vienna, nor gay like Paris, nor picturesque like Rothenberg, but it is just Munich, and is loved for itself alone.

The cold unsentimental northern Germans style Munich the "City of Beer and Art," but what does the stiff Berliner know about happiness, or a cold Hanoverian know about contentment, or a freezing Hamburger know about sentiment? Munich has been called the city of happiness.

Here you can live and be yourself and no one makes a comment. If you are a rank pessimist the Munchener will not try to reform you, or if you are a gay optimist the Munchener will not stare at you, even Americans are not picked out as curiosities in Munich.

Perhaps the wide streets and spacious buildings of Munich have something to do with the freedom of thought of its people. There is no cramped-up feeling here that is so characteristic of most cities. Ludwigstrasse is one of the most imposing streets in the world. It runs from the village of Schwabing, a broad straight street, and lined with beautiful massive buildings, down into the center of town, and is terminated by a building that is a copy of the Loggia at Florence. In a way it is more beautiful than the original, for it is raised from the ground and looks more imposing. Every Sunday morning the city band plays here and the people gather along Ludwigstrasse to listen to the music.

Such happiness these people get from simple pleasures every afternoon. The same band plays in the Hofgarten and the park is packed with people who stop their work to feed their souls. Some parade back and forth, while others sit at the tables along the sides and sip ices and coffee.

Old Rathhause in Munich.

But beneath all this apparent idleness and pleasure loving, Munich is a very busy place. It is the very heart of young artistic Germany, and the great revolutions that have taken place in newspaper and journalistic art have come direct from here, the home of the Jugend, the Simplicissimus and other weekly papers. These magazines have introduced impressionism to our English and American papers, but even still a Munchener artist can tell a story in one line, for which an Englishman must use ten.

The Munich academy is the second best in the world and has sent forth such men as William Chase, Frank Duveneck and Martin Seisser. If you ask a Munchener who was the most important man in the world, the answer is either the prince regent, and Franze Von Stuck or Franze Stuck and the prince regent.

They love the kindly old prince, but their awe of Stuck is marvelous. His word is considered final in art, and his appreciation is shown not only sentimentally, but substantially as well, for he was presented with a beautiful home by the government and a nice pension besides. He is a tall, dark, handsome man. His wife is an American, and although very fond of his wife, he does not like to see too much American independence cropping out in his children. His little girl is a true little German fraulein, while his boy takes all his traits from his mother's ancestors, and is said to be no favorite with his father.

CATHOLIC WOMEN TO BUILD

They Plan to Erect a Church Near University at Washington—To Be Finished in a Year.

Washington.—Catholic women of the United States have banded together for the erection of a church at the Catholic university. The movement was undertaken when the necessity for a church building at the university was discovered and the women devotees refused to permit men to contribute to the fund. They will furnish the money, and also have a voice in the style of building to be erected.

The structure will conform with the architecture in vogue at the university and it is expected that the building will be completed within a year.

NOTED LAVA CAVE IN HAWAII

Tunnel Made by Overflow of Molten Rock Discharged by Mount Mauna Kea.

Hilo, Hawaii.—A short distance from the town of Hilo, the capital of Hawaii, which is the largest island of the Hawaiian archipelago, is a wonderful lava tunnel, called by the natives the Cave of Kaumanu. Through this tunnel, which has an average width of 20 feet, flowed the stream of molten rock discharged from Mt. Mauna Kea, which, hard by, rears itself to a height of 13,000 feet. It is likely that the torrent originated high up the mountain, and, as the surface of the lava grew cold, the molten stream sped on beneath, to emerge lower down as a fiery geyser, spreading ruin on all sides.

To reach Kaumanu the traveler leaves the town by the main road, says the London Field. Three miles out beds of lava begin to be encountered on every hand. It is 30 years since the flow ceased and vegetation is now beginning to cover the area of destruction. The route follows the edge of the lava beds for a distance of about 20 minutes' walk, and then turns across the scattered array of hummocks to where, a hundred yards further on, is the entrance to the cave or tunnel. The view from this point is extensive and varied. There is the blue expanse of the Pacific, perhaps dotted with vessels making for the harbor, or Japanese "power" sampans returning from a night's fishing. The smoke to the right ascends from Kilauea's mighty crater and the scene is completed leftwards by the snow-capped summit of Mauna Kea. But the special object of the trip is to see what lies below. The storekeeper who lives near will supply rough-and-ready torches for five cents each, and no farther outfit is really required for the trip underground, though there are some dainty mortals who bring a suit of overalls. The torches are joints of bamboo filled with oil, in which is a primitive wick, and they prove most effective. The opening to the tunnel is shrouded by a thicket of scrub. A wooden ladder leads down to the floor, a distance of perhaps 25 feet. Rows of diminutive stalactites hang from the roof, glittering in their youth, for they are hardly more than 20 years old and in the formative stage. The sides of the passage are smooth and sometimes damp, but the floor is scored and rough.

A distance of three miles can be covered with the help of the torch, but care is needed where the tree roots thrust themselves through the roof of the tunnel. The presence of these pendant roots indicates that the surface of the lava bed is only a few feet above, and judicious blasting would usefully provide another entrance near the beautiful Rainbow Falls. In places crawling has to be resorted to, but a few strokes of a pickax would doubtless remove the necessity for even stooping.

PLAN U. S. CATHOLIC THEATER

Promoters to Have Nation Wide Union to Eradicate the Immoral Plays.

New York.—The so-called national Catholic theater movement is expected to take definite shape here. The plan of organization, as officially outlined, provides for a nation-wide union for the eradication of immoral drama from the American stage. The influence of the movement is to be concentrated in New York, "while foundation is being laid at the same time in every city for local support of reputable plays."

The organization will be governed by a national committee, which will invite the formation in each city of a Catholic civic committee under the supervision of its bishop. The civic committee in each city will form subcommittees in each parish. The opening of a theater in New York under Catholic supervision is part of the plan.

OFFICER KEEPS SELF WARM

Policeman Covers Standing Place in Order to Avoid Cold in Winter.

St. Louis.—Patrolman R. O. Ely, a member of the traffic squad in East St. Louis, is taking no chances on getting cold feet in winter. On the spot where he has to stand in order to direct passing vehicles there is an iron manhole. The iron plate made an ideal place from which to signal in summer, but with the cold weather the sheet of iron became cold, so did the patrolman's feet. So he has made at his own expense a rubber and fiber jacket, and has obtained permission to cover the manhole with the nonconductor of cold.

SYSTEMATIC METHOD OF PRUNING TREES IS REQUIRED OF ALL ORCHARD PLANTS

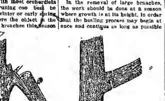
Work Must Necessarily Be Done at Some Particular Season and Carried on After Some Definite Plan—Winter or Early Spring Considered Best Time.

(By L. C. CORBETT.)

Pruning must necessarily be done at some particular season and carried on in a systematic manner after some definite plan. With most orchardists and gardeners pruning can best be done during the winter or early spring months, and where the object is the removal of small branches this season is undoubtedly quite as satisfactory as any other. In fact, pruning during late spring about the time or just previous to the beginning of growth is particularly advantageous with the peach because at this season, as a rule, an injury to the annual growth from winter killing will be apparent and the pruner can take advantage of this to remove all dead or injured branches and at the same time modify his plan so as to leave a maximum quantity of wood in order to secure a profitable crop of fruit, which might not be possible were the usual practice of removing one-half the annual growth followed in such seasons.

With the apple and pear, which suffer less from winter killing, the annual pruning can as well be done in February or March, in the north, as at any other season. Some growers hold that late spring pruning tends to increase the fruit supply and that fall or winter pruning increases the development of wood. In the north as a rule it is best to delay pruning as late as possible where there is danger of winter killing. In other localities, where this injury is not likely to occur, it may be advantageous and equally satisfactory to prune in late fall or early winter. Convenience and climatic conditions must be taken into consideration.

In the removal of large branches, the work should be done at a season where growth is at its height, in order that the healing process may begin at once and continue as long as possible during the season in which the cut is made.



Improper and Proper Methods of Cutting.

In order to facilitate the healing process, all wounds made should be left smooth, that is, if it is necessary to use a saw the surface should be left smooth and clean, particularly around the edges. The saw should be sharp and leave a clean cut and this should in turn be made smoother by the use of the pruning knife or sharp chisel, as the healing process starts quicker and progresses more rapidly when this precaution is observed than when a rough and jagged surface is left.

It frequently happens that in order to obtain the best results in removing large branches two cuts should be made—that is, the branch should be sawed off 18 inches or 2 feet above the point of its origin in order to prevent splitting down and tearing off a considerable portion of bark. After the weight of the branch has been lessened by cutting away the main part a second cut can be made and the stub held in position until the cut is completed, thus preventing the splitting down and tearing of the bark which is likely to result from the careless removal of large branches.

PREPARE SOILS FOR ORCHARDS

In Many Places, Professor Dickinson of Kansas Says, Dynamiting Is Profitable.

An orchardist asks: "Is it advisable to use dynamite in preparing the soil for orchard setting?"

"It is our experience that in many localities this probably will be a profitable treatment," says Professor Dickens of the horticultural department of the Kansas Agricultural college. "In most cases the work should be done one or more seasons before the trees are to be planted, and in any case the pocket formed by the explosion should be thoroughly dug out and refilled with surface soil. In tight, close soils it is possible that if this pocket might be filled with sand or very loamy soil that some of this soil may filter into the cracks formed by the explosion and give a chance for the roots to penetrate the deeper soil. In some soils the advantage of dynamiting seems to be due to the improved drainage secured, but in most soils it is probable that tile drainage would be much the better treatment, as the drains would be permanent and drain much greater area of soil than the dynamite."

Profit From Cattle.

W. H. Young, a farmer and stock feeder of Indiana, has marketed 19 yearling cattle, embracing 12 heifers and 7 steers, averaging 781 pounds, at $6.24. The cattle were graded Herefords. Mr. Young claims they did not lose one pound of their calf fat—they were never allowed to get hungry—and he asserts he was well repaid for their care and keep.

Protecting Young Trees.

To protect young trees from frost a Californian has patented a waterproof cover, which may be tied on a tree to catch the heat that rises from the ground and retain it.

GOOD RESULTS OF PURE MILK CAMPAIGN

After a number of babies in one of Indiana's largest cities had died from the effects of impure milk the people determined to improve the conditions by a well organized campaign of education. The city council passed quick ordinances regarding inspection, not only of the milk delivered by the dairymen to the dealers and by the dealers to consumers, but to the cows and barns on the farms. Agents were sent out to the country to persuade farmers to abolish their unclean and unsanitary barns and milk houses and build new ones on modern lines.

The results have been most satisfactory. Farmers have taken kindly to the suggestion and while at first many of them resented the interference of the inspectors they quickly found that unless they conformed to the laws and produced clean milk they were unable to sell their output. Now new barns with cement floors and whitewashed inside walls well ventilated and modern in every way are rapidly taking the place of the dirty germ-filled ramshackle old buildings that formerly did duty for dairy barns. Every city in every state should follow the example of this Indiana city.

Pasture for Hogs.

Hogs will get about half their living out of the pasture, if they have a chance, but don't turn them into a mudhole or into a field that is as bare of grass as the top of a bald man's head.

Hog Is Not Filthy.

The hog is not necessarily a filthy animal and if he is to make meat suitable for human food he should be fed only such food as will be most conducive to healthy growth.

Training a Calf.

While a calf is not to be credited with very strong reasoning powers, still they can be brought up to obey simple rules to show some affection for the hand that feeds them and to be free from vicious habits.

Care of Colts.

Take good care of the colts, and as soon as they eat see that some ground feed is in the little box next to the mother. The earlier the colt starts to eat, the better.

TO TUNNEL UNDER CHANNEL

Long-Delayed Franco-English Project Is Once More Being Put Forward.

A tunnel between England and France beneath the English channel was first proposed at the beginning of the nineteenth century by Mathieu, a French mining engineer, says the Argonaut. Fifty years later the scheme was financed, but it was not until 1867 that it seemed that the project would be actually attempted. At that time there were a dozen or more plans for rail communication between the two countries. The accepted scheme was that of a tunnel bored beneath the bed of the channel. The estimated cost of the undertaking was about $50,000,000. Preliminary boring had been made, when the work was interrupted by the Franco-Prussian war. In 1874 the French and English governments resumed negotiations concerning the tunnel, leaving the matter in the hands of a joint commission. Failure on the part of the English company holding the contract for the work to receive sufficient funds resulted in the failure of the enterprise in 1880. Now the project is receiving some attention, a better feeling having been established between the people of the two countries.

HAIR CAME OUT IN BUNCHES

813 E. Second St., Muncie, Ind.—"My little girl had a bad breaking out on the scalp. It was little white lumps. The pimples would break out as large as a common pinhead all over her head. They would break and run yellow matter. She suffered nearly a year with itching and burning. It was sore and itched all the time. The matter that ran from her head was very thick. I did not comb her hair very often, her head was too sore to comb it, and when I did comb, it came out in bunches. Some nights her head itched so bad she could not sleep.

"I tried several different soaps and ointments, also patent medicine, but nothing could I get to stop it. I began using Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment this summer after I sent for the free samples. I used them and they did so much good I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap and some Cuticura Ointment. I washed her head with Cuticura Soap and rubbed the Cuticura Ointment in the scalp every two weeks. A week after I had washed her head three times you could not tell she ever had a breaking out on her head. Cuticura Soap and Ointment also made the hair grow beautifully." ### King George Superstitious.

An incident which occurred while the king was out shooting recently over the Hon. John Ward's preserves at Woolley shows that the monarch shares with many other persons the superstition about the number thirteen. The eight guns were joined at luncheon by five women of the party staying at Chilton, and the king noticing the unlucky number would not sit down until Donald Harding, the acting agent upon the estate, was called in to make the number up to fourteen.—New York Herald.

The Real Problem.

"Well, dear," said the young husband to his bride, "I'll make out the deposit slip in your name and all you have to do is to take it to the bank."

Peter Doubt's Recipe for Success.

"When I am asked," the Minneapolis Messenger quotes Peter Doubt as saying, "the secret of success—"

"Surely nobody ever came to you for that," interrupted his wife, with just a touch of sarcasm. "Not up to now," admitted Mr. Doubt, calmly. "But some day some one will. Bound to. Everybody over fifty years of age is asked, sooner or later, to say what he thinks is the secret of success. And so when they ask me I shall say, 'Simply this: If you feel that you must be born, try to be born lucky.'"

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. ## MAKING GOOD

J. D. STANHOPE WELL KNOWN HERE NOW LOCATED METHOW VALLEY, WASHINGTON

Owns Both Hotel and Valuable Fruit Farm in Most Delightful Country

The Herald has received a copy of the Wenatchee Daily World, perfectly illustrated and showing many of the natural advantages and the progress that is being made in the section of the State of Washington where Mr. Stanhope and family are now located.

The paper contains pictures of the town of Methow, the Hotel Methow, and Mr. Stanhope's orchard. We clip two paragraphs from this interesting Western paper:

"Hotel Methow, Methow Valley, J. D. Stanhope, proprietor. Hotel Methow is the commercial man's home and one of the most popular hostelry in Okanogan County. The Methow Feed Stable under the same management furnishes the very best treatment for teams."

"J. D. Stanhope's orchard is one of the best orchard tracts of the Methow Valley. It consists of 20 acres of 4 and 5 year old trees of the best commercial varieties, and is owned by J. D. Stanhope, Methow Valley. It lies just across the Methow River from Methow and is known as the "Beauty Orchard of the Methow."

It makes one want to "go west" to read one of these Western papers and see with what enthusiasm these wide awake people enthuse over the future prospects of the newly made country in the far west.

BIG YIELD

Perry Man Breaks Record on One Acre Corn

Mr. P. S. Penhollow, well known Perry citizen, has made a remarkable record in producing corn from one acre of ground.

He had just one acre into corn on his place which is situated between the C. P. & A. road and the Lake Shore tracks at Perry village. The land is remarkably rich and has been used for years as a onion field. Mr. Penhollow gave the corn about the same amount of cultivation that the busy farmer or business man usually gives corn ground, the weeds were cut out once and the corn cultivated twice one way, that was all.

If there is any one in Lake county who has ever beaten this record let him step forward, we shall be pleased to publish the facts.

ABOUT PEOPLE AND PLACES

There being no federal jobs to bestow, and none in sight for four years, the Garfield Club will have no annual banquet this year.

—o—

Mr. and Mrs. Norman R. Snell moved to Cleveland on Wednesday, where they will spend the winter at the Northampton on Prospect Ave.

—o—

Two new houses are now being built on Walnut avenue near Liberty street. There has been quite a building boom in that section of the city during the past year.

—o—

Stanley Collister, formerly with the White Automobile company in Chicago, has resigned his position with that firm and is now connected with the Vulcan Motor Car company of this city.

—o—

Henry F. Callow, of Leroy, is representing Lake county granges at the state meeting held at Salem this week. Mr. Callow is a Grange enthusiast and this organization is growing in favor among the farmers in Lake county.

—o—

Nothing ever attempted before comes anywhere near equaling the new book "Lake County Illustrated." It shows what a most remarkable country this little county of Lake really is. It is a reflex of all that is best in the county.

—o—

Mr. Eliot does not believe in hell. He is being rebuked by folks who do. We have never been able to understand why their belief in hell is such a touchy subject with some folks. They are perfectly welcome to a hell, as far as most of us are concerned.

—o—

In letters mailed to chairmen and members of all county central and executive committees W. L. Finley, who conducted the Democratic campaign in Ohio, expresses his hearty appreciation of their work as members of a perfect organization. He pays high tribute to them.

Every one in Painesville and vicinity, it seems, is most patriotic, judging by the interest shown in the new book "Lake County Illustrated," the first copy of which came from the Herald Co's press Monday of this week. There was a lively rivalry for the possession of the first copy of the greatest book ever published in this county.

—o—

Some of the letters to Governor Wilson are amusing. One man read the account of how the governor had personally sewed a button on his trousers, and wrote him (with a two-cent stamp, the governor paying the extra three cents to the Bermuda post-office), asking for the button as a souvenir. The governor replied: "I would gladly send it to on, except for the reason that the button is located indispensably."

—o—

Why should any swindler go to the trouble and expense of salting a gold mine when it is possible to persuade simple-minded persons to subscribe to anywhere from $5000 to $100,000 worth of literary junk? The post-office inspectors are coming upon some amazing revelations as to the extent of the "edition de luxe" swindle in New England. In New Hampshire alone one woman has invested $87,000, and two others $40,000 each; the value of the investment is precisely what might be expected.

—o—

Mrs. Mary E. Dewey, a resident of Painesville for fifty years, was found dead at her home on Erie street last Wednesday morning. Mrs. Dewey lived alone and had not been seriously ill any length of time before her death. Funeral services were held Friday and were attended by friends and relatives of the family. Arthur W. Colby read two of Mrs. Dewey's favorite poems and brief remarks were made by A. O. Smith. The bearers were friends and relatives.

—o—

Congressman Bathrick of the 19th district, will not return to Akron until Congress adjourns for the holidays. He has disposed of five postmasterships by recommending appointments to the President, the largest being that at Ashtabula, where Editor C. A. Corbin will get the place. E. F. Chapin, publisher of the Hudson Independent, will be recommended for appointment as postmaster at Hudson, Wilbur F. Carpenter at Geneva, E. A. Harsell, Cortland, E. S. Houser, Girard. No recommendation for the larger offices including Akron, Barberton, Cuyahoga Falls, Kent, Ravenna, Warren and Jefferson, will be made till after the holidays.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT

ONE MAN KILLED AND TWO SEVERELY INJURED AT ELM STREET CROSSING

The Flagman Does His Duty. A Subway at State Street Crossing Might Have Prevented Accident

Another one of those terrible railroad accidents occured here at the Lake Shore railroad, Elm street crossing, Tuesday evening, just before 5 o'clock. One man, Uriah Carlton, was killed outright, and two others, H. C. and Julius Mantle were severely injured.

The Mantle Bros. assisted by Carlton had been loading hay into a car just east of the Lake Shore freight depot. As the three men, riding on the hay rack, attempted to cross the tracks they were struck by a fast freight. Carlton was instantly killed and his body badly mangled. One of the Mantle brothers was so severely injured that it was at first thought he could not recover, but it seems that there are some hopes of the recovery of both the young men. The wagon and hay-rack were smashed into many pieces and parts carried nearly to the State street crossing. The horses were only slightly injured.

The Mantle Bros. came here from W. Virginia a short time ago, and purchased the W. A. Knapp farm, northeast of the city. They have been known as active wide-awake men and their misfortune will be greatly regretted by their many friends.

The Mantle Brothers are being cared for at the Painesville hospital and reports from there Wednesday morning were very favorable.

Uriah Carlton was 30 years of age. He joined the Painesville Camp K. G. T. M. last Wednesday evening. His policy was received by Record Keeper W. E. Chapman Wednesday morning, the 11th inst. The deceased is survived by a wife and two children.

It is a matter of simple justice to say that the flagman at the crossing, Gideon Helmer, risked his own life to prevent this accident, but while this is true still the fact remains that a subway at the Lake Shore tracks might have prevented this loss of life.

COXEY BUSY

Will Organize Another Army For Good Roads in Ohio.

General" Jacob S. Coxey of Massillon, O., in Cleveland last week said he believed the principles for which he led the famous march to Washington in 1894 are about to be applied in Ohio.

Not by federal law, he explained. But Coxey has prepared an amendment to the state constitution to be proposed by initiative petition, making possible a $100,000,000 bond issue for construction and improvement of market roads, and construction of manufacturing plants by the state which would offer positions to labor and furnish products for public improvements at cost.

The commander-in-chief of "Coxey's Army" has established a bureau in Massillon, and is starting a lecture tour of Ohio to obtain petition signatures for his amendment.

In the words of the marching song of his hobo army, "Coxey's on the grass." He said so with a smile yesterday.

Coxey's amendment is a state application of his principles of 1894—government provision for public improvements and for employment of the citizens of the state. To bring the question to a vote will require 104,000 signatures. He said yesterday he thought enough signatures would be obtained to submit the amendment to vote at the next state election.

Washington News Letter

Washington D. C. Nov. 15, 1912.

The Parcel Post created by Act of Congress Aug. 4, 1912, to begin operation Jan. 1, 1913 has awakened great interest all over the country especially in rural districts. Other countries enjoy the benefits of this cheap and convenient method of sending small packages and our Government, in treaties, agrees to deliver parcels sent in this manner from such countries to persons in the United States. There seems no reason therefore, why we should not use the system to the advantage of a large proportion of our people. The scheme is yet only an experiment, but will probably become a valuable institution. Its success will depend upon the rates charged in comparison with those of express companies.

The writer learned, at the Post-Office Department, that while a large part of the office force is busy perfecting plans, there are still important details yet unsettled.

The Act creating the Parcel Post is briefly as follows: Fourth class mail is extended to include everything not now included in other classes; provided the packages do not weigh more than 11 lbs. nor measure more than 72 inches in length and girth combined; and further provided they be not of a shape or character to injure other mail, or to spoil before delivery in a reasonable time. This is practically the whole bill except as to rates. It is easy to regulate the size and weight of parcels but not easy to decide what may be too perishable for each distance, or too dangerous to other mail. These questions are puzzling a special commission, which in conference with Senator Bourne the author of the bill is now trying to settle such details.

Shall live animals be admitted?—and such things as butter, eggs, milk, live pigs and whiskey? It is the evident intent of the bill to provide for dressed poultry, butter, eggs and liquors, for farm and factory products are especially mentioned. But such articles must of course be put in safe containers which may possibly be sold like envelopes.

Dangerous explosives cannot be accepted, and live pigs and turkeys will usually be excluded by weight. But live chickens, for short hauls, may become a common part of the postman's delivery.

For the purpose of fixing rates, 8 zones are created, based upon units that are about 30 miles square, or half a degree of latitude. But for practical purposes we may say that the first zone includes all points within 50 miles of the sending office, the second points between 50 and 150 miles distant, the third 150 to 300, the fourth 300 to 600, the fifth 600 to 1000, the sixth 1000 to 1400, the seventh 1400 to 1800 and the eighth all areas beyond 1800 miles from the sending office.

For small parcels and short distances the rates are much cheaper than present express rates or fourth class mail. But for parcels of five lbs. they closely approximate the usual express charges, and for larger packages and longer distances exceed them. But both express the postal rates, on small packages, are likely to be lowered in the near future.

POEM HITS KAISER AND VON MOLTKE

VERSES WRITTEN BY UNITED STATES ARMY MAN MAY BRING FORTH REPRIMAND.

FUN MADE OF THE TWO MEN

Insinuation of the Lines Is That the Turks Were Beaten Because They Followed Advice of German Military Experts.

Washington, D. C.—One of the members of the German embassy staff indicated that the embassy regards as "impertinent" a poem by Capt. George Steunenberg, U. S. A., published in the Army and Navy Journal in which fun is made of the German emperor and Von Moltke. The insinuation of the verses is that the Turks were beaten because they followed the advice of German military experts.

Tells of Unwritten Law.

It is intimated that while no action has been taken yet the poem will be referred to the state department by the embassy for the former's consideration. It will then be the duty of the state department to refer the complaint to the war department if the state department regards the verses as malicious and impertinent. One of the members of the general army staff said that there is an unwritten law that army and navy officers and in fact all officials of one government shall not appear publicly in the attitude of criticising another power or its people or officers.

The Steunenberg poem is as follows:

(The fighting in Macedonia is a sore subject with Germany. The Turkish army was trained and its officers educated under the German military system.—Literary Digest.)

Oh, hark ye, Yankee soldiers, from far across the sea
Comes the news that Turkey's fighting men were trained by Germany!
That she faced the Balkan allies single-handed and alone
With a simple faith in Allah and our dotted Von Rhone.

And they say that on the morning that the mighty battle broke,
That German tutored army vanished in a whirl of smoke,
That their swords were all unsullied and their guns were all forgot
As they sought the dim horizon in a hasty Turkey trot!

A Montenegrin major gave the flying foe a glance,
Then rolled a cigarette and scratched a match upon his pants,
And spoke unto his gunners: "Let 'em have a few more jolts—
That is if your shells can catch 'em—they've been trained by Von Der Goltz!"

A colonel of Bulgarians then tossed aside his coat
And yelled, "Come on, me hearties! Looks as if we had their goat!
Just follow Uncle Fuller to von battle's merry whirl
While we show 'em how to do it—they've been reading Griepenkerl!"

And from Constantinople the hosts of Allah sped,
And the only ones that halted were the ones that stopped the lead.
Quoth a Servian lieutenant then: "'Tis evident to me
That yon army has been studying the books of Von Moltke."

Said a panting Turkish corporal from German teaching freed:
"We ain't much on formation, but we sure are h—— for speed!"
So they sprinted night and morning till their lungs were fit to burst,
But they won the six day Marathon—they reached the city first!

A tale that points a moral: Most anyone can see
That it's time to disregard the ways of Jackson, Grant and Lee,
For the sacred Scripture tells us: "Ye shall know them by their works."
So we lift our hats to Von Der Goltz, the man who trained the Turks!

And now while Europe trembles on the verge of deadly fray,
The dove of peace is cooing in the good old U. S. A.
For, you bet, the foreign powers will leave Uncle Sam alone,
While our highbrows down at Leavenworth are studying Von Rohne!

And while the German eagle soars above the Balkan storm,
It strikes us a fitting time to change the uniform;
Let's get one of those shiny things they wear across the breast,
And add a gleaming helmet with an eagle on the crest.

And down at Sunny Leavenworth let Dutch professors rule,
And build a model brewery, an annex to the school—
A marble bust of Von Der Goltz resplendent in the hall
And photographs of Kaiser Bill adorning every wall.

And he who seeks promotion must subsist a solid year
On pretzels, cheese and wienerwurst and good old German beer,
And notify the colonels, sound the warning near and far
That they've got to sing "Die Wacht am Rhein" before they get the star.

Then here's luck to the Fatherland! let's follow in her train
And all take up the goose step when we march to war again.
Our motto: "Made in Germany," triumphant over fear;
Our slogan: "Hoch Der Kaiser!" and the countersign: "Zwei Beer."

Scores Anti-Canteen Laws.

Washington, D. C.—Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson in his annual report holds the anti-canteen legislation responsible for moral conditions "which make the record of our army in this respect shameful beyond that of any civilized nation."

In charging the anti-liquor regulations breed much vice in the army the secretary says he speaks with authority because of a personal inspection of 49 of the mobile army posts. He reports finding the military reservations adjoined by vile resorts.

Man Is Robbed of $20,100.

Chicago, Ill.—Joseph Merochnik, a diamond importer of New York, was robbed of $87,500 worth of unset diamonds and $1,000 in cash here by two negroes, according to a report he made the police.

Merochnik was beaten over the head and one of his hands was slashed with a knife. His cravat, in which he wore a diamond pin, was cut off by the robbers.

ENGLAND FILES PROTEST

OFFICIALLY OBJECTS TO REBATE OF PANAMA TOLL TO U. S. SHIPS

Sir Edward Grey Holds Principle Is In Violation of Two Treaties and Takes Issue With Taft.

Washington, D. C.—The protest of Great Britain against the principle of free tolls for American ships in an American canal has just been filed officially with Secretary Knox and simultaneously in the British parliament, the main points in the protest being that such free tolls are a clear violation of the Clayton-Bulwer and Hay-Pauncefote treaties. The case of Great Britain was prepared by Sir Edward Grey, minister of foreign affairs, and was communicated to Secretary Knox by Mr. James Bryce, the British ambassador, accompanied by the counsellor of the British embassy, Mr. Mitchell Innes. The objections set forth by Sir Edward Grey are only an amplification of the short note of Counsellor Innes which was presented July 6 of this year prior to the passage of the Panama canal act.

Must Solve Two Questions.

Summarized, this government is from now on officially engaged on the solution of two questions arising out of the protest:

First—Whether it presents an arbitration question.

Second—Whether the United States will submit the matter to arbitration.

There is good warrant for the state department will hold that there is no arbitrable question involved, no matter what may be the position taken by the president.

As a matter of fact, no matter what the executive departments may do there can be no submission to Great Britain without the consent of the senate.

It is predicted here freely that there can be no arbitration of the question raised by Sir Edward Grey for these reasons:

Reasons Set Forth.

First—The issue of free tolls is one of the internal affairs of the United States concerning solely the domestic policy of the United States.

Second—It is a question of national honor and vital interest.

Third—There is no treaty between the United States and Great Britain which obliged the United States to arbitrate a question of national honor or of vital internal interests.

The duty of the state department and the president, as stated by the highest officials, is that the protest of Sir Edward Grey be given distinct consideration and an answer be made.

England's Argument Answered.

The argument of Sir Edward Grey has been answered heretofore many times. He contends that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is, for his purpose at least, predicated on the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and that it was the intention and spirit of that treaty to give "equal rights" to all nations. Sir Edward Grey further contends that there was no surrender of that principle in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

He takes direct issue with President Taft when he asserts that the president is wrong in holding that the terms used in the treaty, "all nations," do not apply to the United States. He maintains that "equal rights" under the treaties were positively violated when the United States exempted American coastwise shipping from payment of tolls.

Robbers Get $20,000 in Gold.

Bakersfield, Cal.—Bold robbers broke into the express car of Santa Fe train No. 64 that runs between Bakersfield and Taft, beat the messenger into insensibility and escaped with $20,000 in gold coin. The money was consigned to the First National bank of Taft by the First National bank of Bakersfield. It was not placed in the express safe. When the train arrived at Taft railroad men were forced to break down the door of the express car. In a corner was M. W. Hamby, the express messenger.

Man Snatched From Grave.

New York City.—One of the most remarkable surgical operations ever performed in this country has been pronounced by the physicians at the Flower hospital as successful and in consequence John Seconde, a deputy sheriff of Queens county, is well on the way to recovery. The operation consisted of stitching up Seconde's intestines, which had been perforated 14 times by a bullet which also clipped off a portion of Seconde's appendix. The shot which injured Seconde was fired accidentally.

TELLS OF CRUELTY IN BOYS' SCHOOL

CHAPLAIN SAYS LADS WERE BRUTALLY TREATED BY OFFICIALS AND GUARDS.

INMATES CUFFED AND KICKED

Youths Beaten With Leather Straps and Made to Run Around Room and Jump Over Boxes for Two Hours.

Columbus, O.—Boys at the Lancaster Industrial school were beaten with leather straps, made to run around a room and jump over benches for two hours at a time, and if they became exhausted two benches were placed together and the lads made to leap over them, or take a beating, so Chaplain John G. Schaibley declares in his charges against Superintendent F. C. Gerlach to the state board of administration. The charges have just been made public.

Chaplain Schaibley says one of the nurses called his attention to cruelties practiced on the boys for punishment.

"I'm not going to keep still any longer," the nurse told him. "I can't keep still and let such things go on. I hope you will report them to the proper authorities. The things they do to the boys in the correctionary cottage are horrible."

Boys Beg to Be Let Up.

"I have seen those boys praying and begging those officers to let them up, and instead of letting them up and resting, the officers would say: 'You keep that thing up.' They would put the boys 'on line' two or three of them together, and make them stand there by the hour with their faces to the wall," the chaplain declares.

In his charges Schaibley stated that after the Trosky boy had been whipped it was discovered that he was in a serious condition. Superintendent Gerlach and Disciplinarian Wiebe went to the hospital.

The chaplain said Mrs. Trosky had told him that no attempt had been made to bleach out the bruises on the boy's back.

The chaplain cited one instance of finding a boy in one of the cottages doubled up with cramps, and of taking him to the hospital, where the physician in charge gruffly remarked that he had treated him at the morning sick call. He, however, again treated him at the chaplain's request.

Chaplain Schaibley stated that after he had left, he learned that the physician had stated to the boy: "You go back to your cottage and if you come back here again I will kick you out of this hospital."

Schaibley said that later the doctor had told a squad of boys working in the hospital: "That damned minister thinks he is running this hospital. I'll show him."

Schaibley declared that Miss Rhodes, one of the nurses, came to him following this incident and complained of her treatment at the hands of the doctor.

"He says some of the most immoral and indecent things to the boys about me; talks against me and swears like a blue streak," the nurse told Schaibley, according to the charges.

"I finally advised Miss Rhodes to make complaint to Maj. Gerlach," said Schaibley. "Maj. Gerlach told her 'I will investigate!'

"That is as much as Maj. Gerlach ever does with any complaint that is taken to him," charged the chaplain.

Beaten and Kicked.

"On Aug. 15," said Schaibley, "a boy by the name of A. Blumenthal was beaten and kicked in the side and knocked down by Officer Kimball, who was the inside steward, for taking a few biscuits. This happened in the dining room, and when Mrs. Stall protested, Kimball said: 'Oh, the devil with humane treatment.' I reported the incident, but nothing was ever done about it.

"On Oct. 13, while in the chapel, I heard a boy scream, and looking out, saw Officer Hayes of the Hocking cottage strike a boy with his fist, kick him and run him down into the basement, from where I could hear the boy's pleas for mercy. I reported the incident to Gerlach, but no action was taken.

"Later on, the same morning, I passed the Harris cottage and heard boys crying. Looking in I saw Officer Cross knock down six boys with his fists and heard him swear at them. I also reported this with the same result—nothing was done.

"Last July I saw Officer Dillinger knock down a boy named Brown from Lancaster and kick him in the face. When I protested to the officer he told me, 'It is none of your business.'

On Aug. 30, I saw Officer Starkey grab a boy by the coat collar, beat him about the face with his fists, knock him down, kneel on his stomach and strike him eight or ten times. This was witnessed by Officer Hayes, who made no attempt to interfere. All the guards against whom I made protests are still at the institution. Officer Wood kicked a cadet named Ader about the shins so that he was compelled to have his limbs bandaged for several weeks."

Widow Is Granted New Trial.

Columbus, O.—As a result of the ruling of the state supreme court a new trial will be granted in common pleas court in case of Susan J. Bradford, administrator for Harry Bradford, who was electrocuted in Springfield, while employed by Springfield Light, Heat & Power Co. Suit was brought for $10,000 damages and the common pleas court instructed a verdict for the defendant. The case was carried up, the circuit court reversing the lower court and this ruling was sustained by the higher court.

Trains Kill Two Ohioans.

Cincinnati, O.—A man and a woman were killed by railroad trains in and about Cincinnati. Mrs. Charles H. Woellner, 40, wife of Charles H. Woellner, a well known politician, was struck and killed by an outbound Pennsylvania passenger train at Plainville.

BIGGEST OF ALL CROPS

THAT OF 1912 WORTH $9,532,000,000, SAYS MR. WILSON.

Interesting Facts and Figures That Are Found in Annual Report of Secretary of Agriculture.

Washington, D. C.—The most productive year in the history of the United States has drawn to a close, according to the annual report of Secretary of Agriculture Wilson to the president, just made public. Basing his figures on the census items of wealth production on farms, Secretary Wilson values the grand total of the 1912 crop at $9,532,000,000. Besides the production of the soil, this amount includes the live stock output. In commenting on the productiveness of the past year in relation to those preceding, Secretary Wilson said:

"The enormous sum represented by the crop output of the United States for 1912 is more than twice the value of the wealth produced on farms in 1899, according to the census, and it is about one-eighth more than the wealth produced in 1909. During the past 16 years the farmer has steadily increased his wealth production year by year, with the exception of 1911, when the value declined from that of the preceding year."

The report of the secretary was one of the most bulky ever submitted by the department of agriculture. It occupied 259 pages and contained about 200,000 words. Most of this space was devoted to a lengthy review of the technical work of the department, covering such subjects as the epidemic of disease among cattle, the campaign of the department against insects injurious to crops, reports on soils, and a detailed statement of the operations of the weather bureau.

In addition to information of this nature, Secretary Wilson included a crop statement which showed that the corn yield held the lead. The estimated value of this product was $1,780,000,000. The yield reached the high water mark of 3,169,000,000 bushels. Hay was given second place in the estimated figures. The yield was 72,425,000 tons, which was held to be worth $801,000,000.

The wheat yield, as estimated by the department, will be worth to the farmer $596,000,000. Oats were placed as the fifth crop in order, the value being estimated at $478,000,000. The value of the potato crop was placed at $190,000,000; the barley crop at $125,000,000, and tobacco at $97,000,000. The value of the 1912 flaxseed, rye, rice, buckwheat and hops crops were set at $39,000,000, $24,000,000, $20,000,000, $12,000,000 and $11,000,000 respectively. The production of sugar from the beet was set at 700,000 tons.

Farm prices at which the crops of 1912 are valued have declined from the prices of 1911 in the cases of some important products. Barley has declined 30 per cent, corn 10 per cent, oats 25 per cent, rye 17 per cent, wheat 5½ per cent, hay 19 per cent, potatoes 43 per cent, hops 43 per cent, flaxseed 27 per cent and beet sugar and cane sugar about 22 per cent. The price of the cotton crop of 1912 has gained about 13 per cent and for the tobacco crop 7½ per cent. Butter has increased 11 per cent and milk nearly 6 per cent. Eggs have gained 16 per cent and poultry about 1 per cent.

Washington, D. C.—Exclusive of the preconvention expenses, the Progressives spent $665,000 during the recent campaign, according to statements filed with the clerk of the house by the Bull Moose national treasurer. The party owed $5,715 on Nov. 30. The total contributions amounted to $676,672.73. Among those who helped swell the campaign toward the last were Frank A. Munsey, Thomas A. Edison, Thomas O. Plant, of Boston; Robert Bacon, G. G. Vanderbilt, George Porter, of Illinois.

Logansport, Ind.—Mrs. Joseph Lang, the bride of one day, who shot and killed Mrs. Mary Copple, was sentenced to serve from two to 14 years in the woman's prison at Indianapolis, and, in addition, to pay a fine of $25. The woman pleaded guilty in court. Mrs. Lang said the Copple woman said she was "ugly" and that Lang could have done better in choosing a wife. The Copple woman was a guest at the wedding supper. Mrs. Lang said she wished her act to stand out as warning to women who gossip.

THREATEN WILSON, THREE MEN HELD

PRISONERS ARE CHARGED WITH SENDING BLACK HAND LETTERS TO PRESIDENT-ELECT.

SLEUTHS WORK CLEVER RUSE

Detectives Represent Themselves as Pension Agents Seeking Claims and Succeed in Getting Trio to Sign Documents.

Newark, N. J.—Three rough and sullen young mountaineers, who in their dugout in the wild highlands of New Jersey had dreamed of blackmailing the president-elect of the United States, were brought here by three jaded officers of the federal police. That they "did knowingly and wilfully use the United States mails for furthering a scheme to defraud Mr. Woodrow Wilson of Trenton, N. J., was the wording of the charge placed against them. What they had actually done, according to the officers, was to send seven letters to Mr. Wilson during the last month, demanding that he deliver to them $5,000 under threat. The first letter reached the governor's office in Trenton on Nov. 11. The last one reached him in Bermuda.

Sleuths Work Ruse.

While Mr. Wilson expressed no alarm his friends immediately placed the matter in the hands of Postoffice Inspector Cortelyou at Philadelphia. On the day the first letter was received, deputy marshals, secret service men, and postoffice inspectors throughout the state were hunting the blackmailers. Meanwhile, the persistent repetition of the threats went on. The first letters had made Dec. 4 the time limit for the delivery of the money, but that day passed and the next letter extended the time limit to Dec. 15. To Deputy United States Marshal Louis G. Seekman and Postoffice Inspectors Francis Butler and Clinton Larabee, had been assigned the most important and difficult task of keeping secret watch on a rural free delivery post box on a mountain road near Wharton, N. J. It was in this box that the money was to be left, according to the demands of the blackmailers. It was in the desolate wilderness, among the abandoned mines north of Lake Hopatcong and about 14 miles from Dover that Seekman and the inspectors captured the three suspects. The prisoners are Warren Dunn, his brother Jacob, and Seeley Davenport. They were captured by a daring raid and a brilliant detective ruse.

Letter Sent to Wilson.

The letter which led to the arrest of the three men attempting to blackmail Woodrow Wilson, which was written in ink and marked by poor spelling and punctuation, etc., had at the top of it the words, "New York Party," and bore the date, Nov. 11, 1912. It was addressed "Mr. Woodrow Wilson" and read as follows:

"Now I am going to warn you of what we are going to do to you as we did not warn Teddy or McKinlie (evidently meant for McKinley) neither. They got shot just the same, and if we don't get what we ask from you, you will get the same. Say, Wilson, you have got the office as president, yes, and we are death on presidents. So now, Wilson, if you have got five thousand dollars in gold for this Party we will spare your life. But if you have not, we will shoot you before you get in the office as sure as your name is Wilson. So we will give you time to think the matter over so you will know what you are doing, right or wrong, but if you don't send the five thousand dollars, you or some of your people will be sorry that you did not. Say, Wilson, we are not a bit backward in telling you what we mean to do to you. So if you want to live and hold your office, just send five thousand dollars in gold by Nov. 24 and send it by mail. If you don't send it, we will be on your track very soon. Address H. J. Shaduck, R. F. D. Route 8, Box 42, Wharton, N. J."

CINCINNATI FIRE FATAL TO SIX

Blaze Destroys Hotel, Cafe and Five Other Buildings in Buckeye City on the Ohio River.

Cincinnati, O.—Six women met death in a fierce conflagration that threatened to destroy the entire business block bounded by Walnut-st, Vine-st, Fourth-av, and Fifth-av, broke out in the rear of the Gibson House, destroying the Gibson House, Foucars' cafe, the building occupied by the Mecca cafe, the Rendigs-Lothman building, the Missouri Pacific railway building, the W. L. Douglas Shoe Co. building, several floors of the Union Trust building, part of the Honing hotel and part of the Johnston building. The loss of property as a whole is roughly estimated at $1,500,000.

The fire started in the frame work that had been erected in the rear of the old Gibson House, where the new building was being erected. Men were working in a 30-foot deep excavation with gasoline torches when one of them exploded, setting fire to the wood framework.

Steamer and Crew Sink.

Plymouth, England.—An unknown steamer with her entire crew lies at the bottom of the English channel as the result of a collision with the British 60,000 ton dreadnaught Centurion. The disaster came with terrific suddenness in the dark hours of the morning. The apparently lost vessel attempted to cross the bows of the battleship, which was steaming at 20 knots and sank before the Centurion could render help. The battleship's bows were badly damaged from the impact.

Blind Child to Excite Pity.

Cerbere, France.—A man and his wife living in the village of Gavina, Catalonia, were caught in the act of gouging out the eyes of their five-year-old child, with the object of rendering it more pitiable, and thus able to obtain as a beggar more sympathy from the public.

The other inhabitants of the village were attracted by the child's screams, and, when they arrived on the scene found that it had already been blinded and otherwise mutilated. The man and woman were arrested.

NEVER TIRES

Of the Food That Restored Her to Health.

"Something was making me ill and I didn't know the cause," writes a Colo. young lady: "For two years I was thin and sickly, suffering from indigestion and inflammatory rheumatism.

"I had tried different kinds of diet, and many of the remedies recommended, but got no better.

"Finally, Mother suggested that I try Grape-Nuts, and I began at once, eating it with a little cream or milk. A change for the better began at once.

"To-day I am well and am gaining weight and strength all the time. I've gained 10 lbs. in the last five weeks and do not suffer any more from indigestion, and the rheumatism is all gone.

"I know it is to Grape-Nuts alone that I owe my restored health. I still eat the food twice a day and never tire of it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The flavor of Grape-Nuts is peculiar to itself. It is neutral, not too sweet, and has an agreeable, healthful quality that never grows tiresome.

One of the sources of rheumatism is from overloading the system with acid material, the result of imperfect digestion and assimilation.

As soon as improper food is abandoned and Grape-Nuts is taken regularly, digestion is made strong, the organs do their work of building up good red blood cells and of carrying away the excess of disease-making material from the system.

The result is a certain and steady return to normal health and mental activity. "There's a reason." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

PRESIDENT SENDS ANOTHER MESSAGE

Tells Congress About the Fiscal, Military, Insular and Judicial Affairs of the Nation, Including Panama Canal and Tolls Established.

Washington, Dec. 4.—Congress today received from President Taft the second of his messages to the short session. It deals with fiscal, military, insular and judicial affairs and in part is as follows:

The condition of the country with reference to business could hardly be better. While the four years of the administration now drawing to a close have not developed great speculative expansion or a wide field of new investment, the recovery and progress made from the depressing conditions following the panic of 1907 have been steady and the improvement has been clear and easily traced in the statistics. The business of the country is now on a solid basis. Credits are not unduly extended and every phase of the situation seems in a state of preparedness for a period of unexampled prosperity. Manufacturing concerns are running at their full capacity and the demand for labor was never so constant and growing. The foreign trade of the country for this year will exceed $4,000,000,000, while the balance in our favor—that of the excess of exports over imports—will exceed $500,000,000. More than half our exports are manufactures or partly manufactured material, while our exports of farm products do not show the same increase of domestic consumption. It is a year of bumper crops, the total money value of farm products will exceed $9,500,000,000. It is a year when the bushel or unit price of agricultural products has gradually fallen, and yet the total value of the entire crop is greater by over $1,000,000,000 than we have known in our history.

Condition of the Treasury.

The condition of the treasury is very satisfactory. The total interest-bearing debt is $963,777,770, of which $134,631,980 constitute the Panama canal loan. The non-interest-bearing debt is $378,301,284.50, including $346,681,016 of greenbacks. We have in the treasury $150,000,000 in gold coin as a reserve against the outstanding greenbacks, and in addition we have a cash balance in the treasury as a general fund of $167,152,478.99, or an increase of $25,975,652 over the general fund last year.

Receipts and Expenditures.

For three years the expenditures of the government have decreased under the influence of an effort to economize. This year presents an apparent exception. The estimate by the secretary of the treasury of the ordinary receipts, exclusive of postal revenues, for the year ending June 30, 1914, indicates that they will amount to $710,000,000. The sum of the estimates of the expenditures for that same year, exclusive of Panama canal disbursements and postal disbursements payable from postal revenues is $732,000,000, indicating a deficit of $22,000,000. For the year ending June 30, 1913, similarly estimated receipts were $667,000,000, while the total corresponding estimate of expenditures for that year, submitted through the secretary of the treasury to congress, amounted to $656,000,000. This shows an increase of $76,000,000 in the estimates for 1914 over the total estimates of 1913. This is due to an increase of $25,000,000 in the estimate for rivers and harbors for the next year on projects and surveys authorized by congress, to an increase under the new pension bill of $32,500,000, and to an increase in the estimates for expenses of the navy department of $24,600,000. The estimate for the navy department for the year 1913 included two battleships. Congress made provision for only one battleship, and therefore the navy department has deemed it necessary and proper to make an estimate which includes the first year's expenditure for three battleships in addition to the amount required for work on the uncompleted ships now under construction. In addition to the natural increase in the expenditures for the uncompleted ships, and the additional battleship estimated for, the other increases are due to the pay required for 4,000 or more additional enlisted men in the navy, and to this must be added the additional cost of construction imposed by the change in the eight-hour law, which makes it applicable to ships built in private shipyards.

The president then explained at some length the national reserve association system recommended by the monetary commission and urged congress to examine the plan impartially from all standpoints and then to adopt some plan which will secure the benefits desired.

Concerning the tariff he had little to say in view of the fact that a new congress has been elected on a platform of tariff for revenue only.

Army Reorganization.

Our small army now consists of 83,809 men, excluding the 5,000 Philippine scouts. Leaving out of consideration the coast artillery force, whose position is fixed in our various seacoast defenses, and the present garrisons of our various insular possessions, we have today within the continental United States a mobile army of only about 35,000 men. This little force must be still further drawn upon to supply the new garrisons for the great naval base which is being established at Pearl Harbor, in the Hawaiian islands, and to protect the locks now rapidly approaching completion at Panama. The forces remaining in the United States are now scattered in nearly fifty posts, situated for a variety of historical reasons in twenty-four states. These posts contain only fractions of regiments, averaging less than 700 men each. In time of peace it has been our historical policy to administer these units separately by a geographical organization. In other words, our army in time of peace has never been a united organization but merely scattered groups of companies, battalions and regiments, and the first task in time of war has been to create out of these scattered units an army fit for effective teamwork and co-operation.

To the task of meeting these patent defects, the war department has been addressing itself during the past year. A comprehensive plan of reorganization was prepared by the war college division of the general staff. This plan was thoroughly discussed last summer at a series of open conferences held by the secretary of war and attended by representatives from all branches of the army and from congress. In printed form it has been distributed to members of congress and throughout the army and the national guard, and widely through institutions of learning and elsewhere in the United States. In it, for the first time, we have a tentative chart for future progress.

The National Guard.

Under existing law the national guard constitutes, after the regular army, the first line of national defense. Its organization, discipline, training, and equipment, under recent legislation, have been assimilated, as far as possible, to those of the regular army, and its practical efficiency, under the effect of this training, has very greatly increased. Our citizen soldiers under present conditions have reached a stage of development beyond which they cannot reasonably be asked to go without further direct assistance in the form of pay from the federal government. On the other hand, such pay from the national treasury would not be justified unless it produced a proper equivalent in additional efficiency on the part of the national guard. The organized militia today cannot be ordered outside of the limits of the United States, and thus cannot lawfully be used for general military purposes. The officers and men are ambitious and eager to make themselves thus available and to become an efficient national reserve of citizen soldiery. They are the only force of trained men, other than the regular army, upon which we can rely. The so-called military pay bill, in the form agreed on between the authorities of the war department and the representatives of the national guard, in my opinion adequately meets these conditions and offers a proper return for the pay which it is proposed to give to the national guard. I believe that its enactment into law would be a very long step toward providing this nation with a first line of citizen soldiery, upon which its main reliance must depend in case of any national emergency. Plans for the organization of the national guard into tactical divisions, on the same lines as those adopted for the regular army, are being formulated by the war college division of the general staff.

Porto Rico, Mr. Taft says, continues to show notable progress and he urges the senate to pass the bill granting the Porto Ricans American citizenship.

Philippines.

A bill is pending in congress continues the message which revolutionizes the carefully worked out scheme of government under which the Philippine islands are now governed and which proposes to render them virtually autonomous at once and absolutely independent in eight years. Such a proposal can only be founded on the assumption that we have now discharged our trusteeship to the Filipino people and our responsibility for them to the world and that they are now prepared for self-government as well as national sovereignty. A thorough and unbiased knowledge of the facts clearly shows that these assumptions are absolutely without justification. As to this I believe that there is no substantial difference of opinion among any of those who have had the responsibility of facing Philippine problems in the administration of the islands and I believe that no one to whom the future of this people is a responsible concern can countenance a policy fraught with the direst consequences to those on whose behalf it is ostensibly urged.

Our true course is to pursue steadily and courageously the path we have thus far followed, to guide the Filipinos into self-sustaining pursuits, to continue the cultivation of sound political habits through education and political practice, to encourage the diversification of industries, and to realize the advantages of their industrial education by conservatively approved co-operative methods, at once checking the dangers of concentrated wealth and building up a sturdy independent citizenship.

Regulation of Water Power.

There are pending before congress a large number of bills proposing to grant privileges of erecting dams for the purpose of creating water power in our navigable rivers. The pendency of these bills has brought out an important defect in the existing general dam act. That act does not, in my opinion, grant sufficient power to the federal government in dealing with the construction of such dams to exact protective conditions in the interest of navigation. It does not permit the federal government, as a condition of its permit, to require that a part of the value thus created shall be applied to the further general improvement and protection of the stream. I believe this to be one of the most important matters of internal improvement now confronting the government. Most of the navigable rivers of this country are comparatively long and shallow. In order that they may be made fully useful for navigation there has come into vogue a method of improvement known as canalization, or the slack-water method, which consists in building a series of dams and locks, each of which will create a long pool of deep navigable water. At each of these dams there is usually created a long pool of deep navigable water. At each of these dams there is usually created also water power of commercial value. If the water power thus created can be made available for the further improvement of navigation in the stream, it is manifest that the improvement will be much more quickly effected on the one hand, and on the other, that the burden on the general taxpayers of the country will be very much reduced. Private interests seeking permits to building waterpower dams in navigable streams usually urge that they thus improve navigation, and that if they do not impair navigation they should be allowed to take for themselves the entire profits of the water-power development. Whatever they may do by way of relieving the government of the expense of improving navigation should be given due consideration, but it must be apparent that there may be a profit beyond a reasonably liberal return upon the private investment which is a potential asset of the government in carrying out a comprehensive policy of waterway development. It is no objection to the retention and use of such an asset by the government that a comprehensive waterway policy will include the protection and development of the other public uses of water, which cannot and should not be ignored in making and executing plans for the protection and development of navigation. It is also equally clear that inasmuch as the water power thus created is or may be an incident of a general scheme of waterway improvement within the constitutional jurisdiction of the federal government, the regulation of such water power lies also within that jurisdiction. In my opinion constructive statesmanship requires that legislation should be enacted which will permit the development of navigation in these great rivers to go hand in hand with the utilization of this by-product of water power, created in the course of the same improvement, and that the general dam act should be so amended as to make this possible. I deem it highly important that the nation should adopt a consistent and harmonious treatment of these water power projects which will preserve for this purpose their value to the government, whose right it is to grant the permit. Any other policy is equivalent to throwing away a most valuable national asset.

The Panama Canal.

During the past year the work of construction upon the canal has progressed most satisfactorily. About 87 per cent of the excavation work has been completed, and more than 93 per cent of the concrete for all the locks is in place. In view of the great interest which has been manifested as to some slides in the Culebra Cut, I am glad to say that the report of Col. Goethals should allay any apprehension on this point. It is gratifying to note that none of the slides which occurred during this year would have interfered with the passage of the ships had the canal, in fact, been in operation, and when the slope pressures will have been finally adjusted and the growth of vegetation will minimize erosion in the banks of the cut, the slide problem will be practically solved and an ample stability assured for the Culebra Cut.

Although the official date of the opening has been set for January 1, 1915, the canal will, in fact, from present indications, be opened for shipping during the latter half of 1913. No fixed date can as yet be set, but shipping interests will be advised as soon as assurance can be given that vessels can pass through without unnecessary delay.

Recognizing the administrative problem in the management of the canal, congress in the act of August 24, 1912, has made admirable provision for executive responsibility in the control of the canal and the government of the Canal Zone. The problem of most efficient organization is receiving careful consideration, so that a scheme of organization and control best adapted to the conditions of the canal may be formulated and put in operation as expeditiously as possible. Acting under the authority conferred on me by congress, I have, by executive proclamation promulgated the following schedule of tolls for ships passing through the canal, based upon the thorough report of Emory R. Johnson, special commissioner on traffic and tolls:

1. On merchant vessels carrying passengers or cargo, $1.20 per net vessel ton—each 100 cubic feet—of actual capacity.

2. On vessels in ballast without passengers or cargo, 40 per cent less than the rate of tolls for vessels with passengers or cargo.

3. Upon naval vessels, other than transports, colliers, hospital ships, and supply ships, 50 cents per displacement ton.

4. Upon army and navy transports, colliers, hospital ships, and supply ships, $1.20 per net ton, the vessels to be measured by the same rules as are employed in determining the net tonnage of merchant vessels.

Rules for the determination of the tonnage upon which toll charges are based are now in course of preparation and will be promulgated in due season.

Panama Canal Treaty.

The proclamation which I have issued in respect to the Panama Canal tolls is in accord with the Panama Canal act passed by this congress August 24, 1912. We have been advised that the British government has prepared a protest against the act and its enforcement in so far as it relieves from the payment of tolls American ships engaged in the American coastwise trade on the ground that it violates British rights under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty concerning the Panama Canal. When the protest is presented it will be promptly considered and an effort made to reach a satisfactory adjustment of any differences there may be between the two governments.

Promotion for Col. Goethals.

As the completion of the canal grows nearer, and as the wonderful executive work of Col. Goethals becomes more conspicuous in the eyes of the country and of the world, it seems to me wise and proper to make provision by law for such reward to him as may be commensurate with the service that he has rendered to his country. I suggest that this reward take the form of an appointment of Col. Goethals as a major general in the army of the United States, and that the law authorizing such appointment be accompanied with a provision permitting his designation as chief of engineers upon the retirement of the present incumbent of that office.

The navy of the United States is in a greater state of efficiency and is more powerful than it has been before, but in the emulation which exists between different countries in respect to the increase of naval and military armaments this condition is not a permanent one. In view of the many improvements and increases by foreign governments the slightest halt on our part in respect to new construction throws us back and reduces us from a naval power of the first rank and places us among the nations of the second rank.

A year ago congress refused to appropriate for more than one battleship. In this I think a great mistake of policy was made, and I urgently recommend that this congress make up for the mistake of the last session by appropriations authorizing the construction of three battleships in addition to destroyers, fuel ships and the other auxiliary vessels as shown in the building program of the general board. We are confronted by a condition in respect to the navies of the world which requires us, if we would maintain our navy as an insurance of peace, to augment our naval force by at least two battleships a year and by battle cruisers, gunboats, torpedo destroyers and submarine boats in a proper proportion. We have no desire for war. We go as far as any nation in the world to avoid war, but we are a world power. Our population, our wealth, our definite policies, our responsibilities in the Pacific and the Atlantic, our defense of the Panama canal, together with our enormous world trade and our missionary outposts on the frontiers of civilization, require us to recognize our position as one of the foremost in the family of nations and to clothe ourselves with sufficient naval power to give force to our reasonable demands, and to give weight to our influence in those directions of progress that a powerful Christian nation should advocate.

Department of Justice.

This department has been very active in the enforcement of the law. It has been better organized and with a larger force than ever before in the history of the government. The prosecutions which have been successfully concluded and which are now pending testify to the effectiveness of the department work.

The prosecution of trusts under the Sherman anti-trust law has gone on without restraint or diminution, and decrees similar to those entered in the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases have been entered in other suits like the suits against the powder trust and the bath tub trust. I am very strongly convinced that a steady, consistent course in this regard with a continuing of supreme court decisions upon the new phases of the trust question not already finally decided is going to offer a solution of this much-discussed and troublesome issue in a quiet, calm and judicial way, without any radical legislation changing the governmental policy in regard to combinations now denounced by the Sherman anti-trust law. I have already recommended as an aid in this matter legislation which would declare unlawful certain well-known phases of unfair competition in interstate trade, and I have also advocated voluntary national incorporation for the larger industrial enterprises, with provision for a closer supervision by the bureau of corporations, or a board appointed for the purpose, so as to make certain compliance with the anti-trust law on the one hand and to give greater security to the stockholders against possible prosecutions on the other. I believe, however, that the orderly course of litigation in the courts and the regular prosecution of trusts charged with the violation of the anti-trust law is producing among business men a clearer and clearer perception of the line of distinction between business that is to be encouraged and business that is to be condemned, and that in this quiet way the question of trusts can be settled and competition retained as an economic force to secure reasonableness in prices and freedom and independence in trade.

End of New York Landmark.

Another New York landmark is passing—the Mott Memorial Surgical and Medical Library property. It will be altered for business purposes. The library was established in 1866 by Dr. Valentine Mott, father of American surgery, as he was later called. At that period he was one of the foremost surgeons. There were no medical libraries in New York then, and to help along students Dr. Mott gave his private library, which was one of the best in the country. Besides his books, medical instruments of the different periods were on exhibition there. The books and instruments of Dr. Mott have now been taken by the New York Academy of Medicine.

Millions of Electric Lights.

In Manhattan there is an electric light for each inhabitant of the city, but, taking the city as a whole, this average would be considerably reduced, as, for instance, the borough of Brooklyn has but one thousand. The other boroughs which go to make up the city would show a lower figure. Some of the other cities of this country may have a percentage almost, if not as great. In Denver, for instance, the use of electric signs and lights for illuminating and decorative purposes has become so general that some of its business men are advertising it as the Electric City. One building in that city is outlined outside with 72,000-candle power.

Never despair; but if you do work on in despair.—Burke.

TO ASK STATE TO HELP

TUBERCULOSIS FIGHTERS TO SEEK AID OF LEGISLATURE.

After Ten Years of Crusade Against White Plague, Ohio Society Needs Appropriation to Extend Work.

Columbus.—After fighting "the white plague" for more than ten years with a volunteer organization, the Ohio Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis will ask the state to take up the work and devote a part of its resources to curbing the disease which, reliable statistics show, kills more than 7,000 Ohioans annually.

In a statement, Dr. Robert O. Paterson, executive secretary of the state association, outlines the plans for the proposed state division of tuberculosis, to be conducted under the state board of health, and for which the legislature will be asked to appropriate $25,000 a year for two years.

A bill setting forth the detail of the plan has been drafted and approved by the leading physicians and social workers of the state and is being submitted to the members of the coming legislature.

If the appropriation is made, and indications are that it will be, the state will carry on the work the state society has begun; extend it and conduct a campaign of education through the newspapers and through exhibits to teach the people means of preventing and fighting the modern scourge.

Gas Development Is Active.

That the many cities throughout Ohio will have a good supply of natural gas, provided pressure can be maintained, is evidenced by recent bringing in of new wells by the bigger supply companies. The Ohio Fuel Supply Co., operating in the Lancaster field, is putting in a new line from the Sugar Grove Station to the new Laurel township field, which will give a better supply. The Columbus Gas and Fuel Co. has brought in a new 1,250,000 cubic foot gasser in the Gibsonville district and has three others near completion. The same company in Licking county has a new 1,250,000 cubic foot well. In Ashland county the Clark Oil and Gas Co. has brought in a 3,000,000 cubic foot strike on the Freer farm and the Ohio Fuel Co. on the Arter farm has a new one good for 800,000 cubic feet, and a small producer of gas in its first venture on the Wolfe farm, same county, good for 300,000 feet. The Medina Gas and Fuel Co. supplying Ada, Lima, St. Marys, Wapakoneta, Kenton and other northwestern Ohio towns, has a new 1,000,000 cubic foot well in the Medina county field. In Richland county the Ohio Fuel Supply Co. has a new 3,400,000 cubic foot well on the Boyd farm east of Butler.

Hunters Bag Little Game.

Notwithstanding almost perfect weather during the entire 20 days of the 1912 hunting season, which closed December 4th, less game was bagged this fall by hunters than in previous years, according to Secretary G. F. Mahaffey of the state fish and game commission. Hunters have reported a general dearth of quail, while other game was more or less scarce.

Farmers in the southern part of the state reported few quail in that section on account of a severe hail storm last summer during the nesting season, which destroyed thousands of eggs. An investigation by the fish and game commission as to the real cause of the scarcity of quail, however, is likely, and more stringent protection may be urged at the coming session of the legislature.

Few violations of the hunting laws were reported to the commission during the open season. Violators of the game laws, Mr. Mahaffey explained, are generally those who are impatient to start the season too early or those who extend the season over the statutory period.

Ohio Cattle Take Prizes.

The junior bull championship of the shorthorn division at the International Live Stock Exhibition was awarded to Maxwell of Renowood, owned by Carpenter & Ross, of Mansfield, O. Village Primrose the Second, a senior heifer calf of the shorthorn division, owned by O. R. Hanna, was placed junior champion female. The animal was also awarded first honors in the senior heifer calf class. Village Flower, a junior heifer calf of the shorthorn division, owned by W. C. Rosenbarger, of Tiffin, O., was placed fourth in the same contest. Ohio-bred sheep carried away 14 prizes and two championships.

Hunting Costs Nine Lives.

The rabbit hunting season in Ohio, which began November 15th and ends December 4th, cost nine lives. In addition, 88 have been wounded. A large proportion of these have lost an eye, an arm, a hand or a leg in the many accidents.

Mine Inspectors in Conference.

After a three days' session the deputy inspectors, under Chief Mine Inspector David J. Davies, of the state department, adjourned, possessing newly acquired knowledge of the workings of the apparatus recently purchased by the department for assistance in mine rescue work. Another meeting of the inspectors will be in January, and at that time it is expected that drafts will be made of bills to be presented to the legislature, with a view to improving conditions in the mines of the state.

Auditors Get Money Back.

Two former County Auditors get Christmas money through reports of the State Bureau of Accounting. The additional amounts come to them through a decision of the supreme Court regarding the decision of fees for tax collection under the old fee system act, which has been displaced by the county salary law. Former Auditor A. B. Conklin, of Delaware county, draws $403.46, while Floyd Alwill, former Auditor of Paulding county, now Assistant Clerk of the Senate, is entitled to $404.48.

Bonds Hard to Sell.

The public service commission has been compelled to take cognizance of the present state of the money market in prescribing the conditions under which new securities of public service corporations may be sold. New financing requirements of several corporations and their inability to find a market for their securities have brought them back to the attention of the commission. The Big Four railroad was given authority over a month ago to sell $1,678,000 general mortgage bonds at not less than 92 by the commission. It was proposed to make extensive improvements with the proceeds. However, the railroad company failed to find a market for its offerings at the figure fixed by the state authorities. It reported that the proposition was hopeless. The commission after a perfunctory investigation revised its order, permitting 90 to be accepted. The Washington Gas and Electric Company of Washington C. H. reported to the commission that it had found it impossible to find a buyer for $100,000 in mortgage bonds bearing 5 per cent interest. The issue was authorized some time ago but the company had hunted in vain for a market. The commission revised its order in this case by authorizing 6 per cent interest to be paid upon the bonds.

Association Favors Edwards Bill.

Change in the present system of tax assessment, as embodied in the Edward's bill, which failed to pass the legislature two years ago, was recommended at the close of the annual session of the Ohio Association of County Auditors meeting at the Hotel Hartman. The proposed change would abolish the office of personal property assessors, and, instead, provide deputy county tax commissions which would have charge of the assessment for taxation of both real and personal property. The county, instead of the township, would become the unit of taxation and the quadrennial assessment of real estate would be a thing of the past.

Auditor R. D. Alexander, of Ross county, was elected president of the association to succeed C. C. Meckison, who retires next October as auditor of Henry county. Other officers chosen were C. E. Steinbaugh, of Wood county, vice president; A. R. Peckinpaugh, Columbus, secretary; Auditor Charles R. Gibson, of Noble county, treasurer.

Trunk Lines Are Barred.

Although holding the stock of the Akron and Barberton Belt Railway, the Pennsylvania, Cleveland, Akron and Columbus; Erie, Northern Ohio, and Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Companies were refused permission to enter as co-defendants in an action now before the public utilities commission, by which an effort is being made to compel the belt line to establish interswitching connections with the Akron, Cleveland and Youngstown system.

The suit originally was brought by the Akron, Cleveland and Youngstown Company and shippers at Akron, who desired facilities by which transfers could be made from one road to the other. While the commission now has jurisdiction it is thought that if the holding roads, which do an interstate business, became parties to the defense, they might enter pleas that the Belt Line is their terminal and thus raise a question as to the commission's right to order a hearing.

Michigan Law Is Model.

Michigan's mechanics' lien law is to be made the basis of legislation under the new mechanics' lien provision in the constitution, if lumber interests of the state, which were behind the amendment, have their way. A bill embodying the principles of the Michigan law has already been drafted, and bears approval of the Retail Lumbermen's association. It will be presented to the next general assembly, and the lumber men hope to have the backing of the labor unions, builders' exchanges of the large cities and building and loan companies. The last named are not yet committed to the plan. In effect the Michigan law provides that no builder or owner can be required to pay more than the contract price for any work. It does not protect the builder or owner against claims until after the full contract price has been paid and receipts obtained from the contractors.

May Create Child Commission.

With the attention of the charity organizations of the state directed toward the child welfare code which will be presented to the legislature at its next session, it is probable that steps toward the creation of a central commission will be taken.

At present there are upward of 3,500 children in the 59 homes in Ohio. Almost daily Secretary H. H. Shirer of the state board of charities receives letters inquiring as to the method of adopting children and he is of the opinion that this work would be greatly facilitated by a children's commission.

Lectures for Engineering Classes.

Samuel G. McMeen, president of the Columbus Railway and Light Co., was the first of nine lecturers to address the Ohio State university engineering classes during the winter. This scheme is to become a permanent feature of work in that department, with a view to increasing its cultural value, according to Prof. Edward Orton, Jr., dean of the college of engineers. The lectures are to be given by men actually engaged in practical work of the various lines of engineering.

That he will offer a measure prohibiting divorce in Ohio at the next session of the legislature was declared by James T. Carroll, editor of The Catholic Columbian, who is to represent Franklin county. "I do not know yet just what we can accomplish," said Mr. Carroll, "but I shall at least try. I think divorce is something that should be regulated for the good of the people of this state, as it is being done in others. In South Carolina it is now prohibited and I hope to get some good ideas from studying laws now in effect.

BIG PLANT IS BURNED

MAN LOSES LIFE IN FACTORY FIRE AT BELLEFONTAINE.

Cause of Fire Is Mystery—Loss Will Exceed $40,000—Men Escape By Means of Ropes and Chains.

Bellefontaine.—John A. Horn, aged 74, was killed and Henry Swalter and J. H. McPeck were terribly burned here in a fire which destroyed the plant of the Buckeye Carriage Body Manufacturing Co., with a loss which will exceed $40,000. The men were employes of the company, Horn being the oldest in point of service.

Many workmen escaped from the second and third floors of the building by means of chains and ropes. It is thought that Horn was overcome by smoke. His body was found in the ruins.

The cause of the fire is a mystery. The flames burst forth without warning and consumed the contents of the building, including valuable patterns. Firemen succeeded in saving adjacent buildings.

CETONE FOUND GUILTY

Dayton Solon Convicted of Receiving a Bribe.

Columbus.—Guilty. This was the verdict rendered in the bribery trial of Senator George K. Cetone of Montgomery county. Reliance of Senator Cetone in his ability to make a farmer jury believe that, even though he may have accepted a bribe of $200 from a Burns detective April 27, 1911, it did not influence him in his action on a bill which he had introduced, proved unavailing, as did also the fact that 10 representative citizens of his home city, Dayton, gave him a good reputation and character. After only one hour and 10 minutes' deliberation the farmer jury declared him guilty of accepting a bribe to influence him in his official action.

The maximum penitentiary sentence confronting Cetone is five years.

Senator Cetone is a successful fruit farmer, owning two large tracts of fruit land in Montgomery county. He is secretary of the Montgomery County Fair Association. At one time he was a bridge salesman, and through his political connection was able to land some large contracts.

Politically Senator Cetone is a Democrat. His first break into bigger politics from a ward worker at $3 a day was 10 years ago, when, during a factional fight in his party, he cast his lot with E. W. Hanley. After that he advanced rapidly as a political leader. He was serving his first term as senator when indicted.

MANY COMPANIES JOINING.

Columbus, O.—Unparalleled activity on the part of Ohio employers to take advantage of the workingmen's compensation act is seen by the State Liability Board of Awards, according to Secretary W. C. Archer. The reduction of the rates and the revision of rules, is proving so pleasing to employers that the board is flooded with applications. During the present month more than 400 employers will join the state insurance fund, Mr. Archer said. He said time would demonstrate that no radical changes are needed in the law. The Selby Shoe Company, of Portsmouth, Ohio, employing more than 1,500 workers, have joined.

The committee has been assured by the state officials that at least 500 delegates will attend the convention and the committee proposes to bend every effort in according the Woodmen a hearty welcome and provide a round of pleasure and entertainment, for the three days.

GETS DAMAGES FOR ACCIDENT.

Dayton, O.—Charles L. Wollenhaupt, 254 Shaw avenue, was given $12,500 by the Ohio Electric Railway Co. as a compromise settlement for personal injuries he received some months ago. Wollenhaupt was a passenger riding on the rear platform of a City railway car, and was badly crushed when a heavy interurban car collided with the lighter and smaller vehicle. One leg had to be amputated.

ORPHAN TO GET $12,000.

PRESIDENTS BY POPULAR VOTE

An amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of the President and Vice-President by a direct vote of the people is proposed by Senator Works of California in a resolution introduced Friday.

If the American people were making a Constitution today as the Fathers of the Republic made one in 1787 that plan would undoubtedly be adopted. Had Presidents been chosen by popular vote, Andrew Jackson and not John Quincy Adams would have been elected in 1824; Samuel J. Tilden and not Rutherford B. Hayes would have been elected in 1876, Grover Cleveland and not Benjamin Harrison would have been elected in 1888.

The Electoral College is a clumsy device in the light of modern experience and modern methods of communication. It is the one conspicuous failure of the Constitution, and its original purpose was long ago nullified by common consent.

A PROGRESSIVE NEWSPAPER
Springfield Republican
MASSACHUSETTS
HONESTLY DEVOTED TO THE SERVICE OF THE PEOPLE
Independent of Selfish Political, Personal or Financial Influences
COURAGEOUS, ENTERPRISING, INTERESTING
ESTABLISHED IN 1824 BY SAMUEL BOWLES
DAILY (morning) $8, SUNDAY $2, WEEKLY $1 a Year

The Springfield Republican stands for political progress and social justice. It has stood for these causes consistently and strongly during the 88 years of its career. It stands also for honesty in all of the relations of life, personal, political, commercial, industrial, national and international. It considers that honesty is an essential basis of real political progress and social justice. It refuses to follow popular leaders who lack this fundamental virtue, however captivating and eloquent.

The Republican has a profound faith in democratic institutions, but it recognizes clearly that the safeguard of a progressive democracy is universal education, developing an enlightened electorate which may deal justly with the difficult problems that modern civilization presents. It looks forward through the agency of such an electorate to an increasing restraint of the aggrandizing activities of powerful individuals and groups to the end that there may be a juster distribution of the fruits of labor and a fuller realization of the ideal of the commonwealth.

The Republican seeks to embody its principles in its own service to the people as a newspaper. It strives ever to deal with its public honestly in its presentation of the news of the day. It tells no lies to promote its sales. It aims to educate, to enlighten and uplift its readers, and yet to interest and entertain them by honest methods. Its editorial page is one of the strongest, keenest, broadest, in the country. It deals with all the subjects that concern humanity in the spirit of helpfulness, of healthier, happier living.

The Republican gives a news service that is real, not flashy. It commands the best agencies for its general news, often supplemented by special correspondence. It covers its home territory with remarkable thoroughness, and it devotes large and expert attention to all of the healthy outdoor sports. It gives liberal treatment to literature and to the arts, sciences and industries. The Sunday Republican is especially rich in delightful literary and other diverting features and departments.

THE WEEKLY REPUBLICAN

Presents in 16 broad pages the best editorial, literary and special features of the seven daily issues, with carefully edited and rewritten summaries of the important news of the week. It is an excellent home journal for intelligent people who wish to keep abreast of the best thought of the times, as well as of the news of the day, and it costs only ONE DOLLAR A YEAR.

MENTOR

The weather all this past week has been fine, though very unseasonable; but on yesterday (Sunday) it was noticed as being some colder when people started for church, but still nothing at all disagreeable. About eleven, the sky grew so dark that the electric lights had to be turned on in order to permit of the reading of responses or seeing the words of the hymns; and it remained dark all during the services, and when finally the people were released, the ground was found to be white with snow and a regular blizzard on hand, which is still with us.

Mr. Grant Cowles was at home for a short time one day last week, but is expecting to be obliged to spend most of the winter with his brother in Madison, since their severe illness there.

The second entertainment on the "Course Tickets" is due to come off on Saturday evening of next week, when Mr. John Chambers, the "Impersonator" is to be here.

Mr. Oliver Littlejohn of Chardon, was in our village on business one day last week, and took dinner with Mr. and Mrs. Harry King, at "Southwood".

Mr. and Mrs. Will Morley left here on the evening train on Tuesday for their winter home in Florida, Mr. Samuel Whiting having already gone down there from Omaha, where he had been spending some weeks with his oldest daughter, Mrs. George Damon.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Disciple Church was very successful indeed, in their bazaar on Wednesday last, and cleared something over a hundred dollars, which with some gifts of money, brought the total up to a hundred and thirty good dollars. They have been so successful in their "food sales" that a request has been sent in that they should continue them through the winter especially as all the baker's wagons have ceased to run through here, but whether they will feel they can keep it up or not we have not yet learned. Any woman who would undertake to make the old fashioned "Salt Rising" bread would have as many orders as she could fill, we think, from what we have heard.

Mr. R. G. Clapp is away in the east on a business trip, where he will spend some time in Philadelphia and other cities before returning home.

The library meeting which had been called for Friday evening had to be again postponed, on account of a business call upon Mr. James R. Garfield thereby preventing him from being able to come down from the city, where they are spending the winter. This meeting is to be held some time during the holidays, when they will all be at home.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Sanborn of Silver Lake, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Glenn for a few days during Thanksgiving week, and their daughter Miss Dorothea, remained until the following Monday, as the guest of her school friend, Flored Olean.

Mrs. Frank Case expects to join her husband in Hudson, sometime this week, for a few days, before going East.

Mr. W. F. Aldrich, of Princess Anne, Md., was in our village last week, as the guest of his aunt, Mrs. John Tyler at the Center.

Miss Henrietta Parker is spending a short time here with her father, Col. Parker and his family. Miss Henrietta is taking the course of study necessary to prepare herself for the profession of "trained nurse" a position in which we are sure she will succeed.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Snell have been enjoying a visit from Mr. Hiram Snell of Madison, recently.

Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Rosenthall are spending some two or three weeks up in Grand Rapids, Mich., with relatives there.

Mrs. Philip Hagenberger had quite a family gathering recently and a very happy time, the occasion being the birthday of the mother.

Mrs. Chas. Johnson was a guest of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Warren over in Concord, for a short time last week.

Dr. M. S. Clark and Mrs. Clark have just returned from a visit with friends living in the southern part of the state.

Mrs. T. P. Cadle is enjoying a visit from her cousin, Mrs. Jessie Hadley and her husband, whose home is in Pittsburgh. Mrs. Hadley had visited here so often during the years when her aunt, Mrs. Dunbar, was in the Methodist parsonage and made so many friends here during that time, that she held quite a reception in the church Sunday, after the sermon.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Smith have returned from spending several days up in the city with the family of Mrs. Smith's brother, Mr. Charles Rexford of the Higbee Co.

Mrs. Della Corning has just returned from visiting the family of her husband's brother, Mr. James Corning, who died some years ago at his home in South Bend, Ind. Mrs. James Corning is still living, and will be remembered as Miss Mary Thompson, of Mentor or Concord, we are not sure which.

Mr. and Mrs. Warren Rexford have been spending a few days recently with friends in the City.

Col. Spaulding has just been having a visit from his brother, Mr. Prior Spaulding, whose home is over in Munson.

Mrs. Henry Sandberg gave a most delightful afternoon party on Friday for her friend, Mrs. Frank Case, at which the following ladies were present: Mrs. R. M. Park, Mrs. Sam Curliss, Mrs. T. D. Morley, Mrs. James Smith, Mrs. N. C. Frost, Mrs. Harry Lamb, Mrs. T. O. Hart, Mrs. W. A. Sawyer, Mrs. Charles Church, Mrs. Frank Case, Mrs. Will Merkle, Mrs. Frank Sandberg, Mrs. Robert Case, Mrs. Harry King, Mrs. E. S. Sawyer, Miss Sarah Richmond, Miss Edith Woodruff, Miss Nellie King, Miss Ida Merkle, Miss Jeannette Munson, Miss Frances Cleveland, Miss King, Miss Park from Painesville, and from the College came Miss Keffer and Miss Gates, and with them Miss Alice Thurston, Miss Faith Lobdell and Miss Ruth Blair.

The Ladies Club are to meet this Wednesday with Mrs. George Hoose.

Mrs. Robert Case made a birthday party on Monday last for Miss Frances Cleveland to which a few choice friends were invited, and on Friday evening just after choir rehearsal, Miss Cleveland was invited to the church dining room where she found quite a surprise awaiting her, in the shape of a good supper and many expressions of regard from said choir, and "happy returns of the day" etc.

The new furnace is in the Library building, will be fired up today, and library business can be transacted after this as usual.

The men of the M. E. Church are to eat supper together on Wednesday evening for the express purpose of getting better acquainted, we understand.

The Queen Esther Circle have just finished packing a box for the Deaconess Home in Cleveland.

Miss Delilah Hammond and her sister, Mrs. Emma Hammond and her small daughter, Hazel, were guests over Thanksgiving time of her nephew, Henry Hammond, of East Cleveland.

Mentor people are wondering why they cannot build some air-castles over the wonderful gas well recently opened up on the Hitchcock farm. If there is going to be enough to light and heat all of Painesville, it would seem as if enough might be spared to at least permit Mentor women to cook by it?

The body of Mr. Dan F. Hopkins was laid away to sleep in our Mentor cemetery on Wednesday last, under the auspices of the Grand Army of which he was a veteran. We understand, that he had gone down to Florida with his brother, M. V. Hopkins, and that he died there, which seems unusually sad.

Miss Ida Merkle is expecting to spend this coming week in the city with her sister, Mrs. Loheline, and her family.

Mrs. Church, the president of the Woman's meeting has appointed as committee on program, Mrs. Whitcomb, Mrs. Will Sawyer, and Mrs. Siegler, while Mrs. Cottell and Mrs. Bean are a donation committee, and Mrs. T. D. Morley and Mrs. Steven a committee of inspection.

Since the Ladies Aid of the Methodist Church have earned seven hundred dollars towards a pipe organ besides paying five dollars a month to the organist, there are some who think the time has come when Mr. Carnegie or some other generously inclined person should be invited to make up the deficit.

SYNOPSIS.

Harding Kent calls on Louise Farrish to propose marriage and finds the house in great excitement over the attempted suicide of her sister Katharine. Kent starts an investigation and finds that Hugh Crandall, suitor for Katharine, who had been forbidden the house by General Farrish, had talked with Katharine over the telephone just before she shot herself. A torn piece of yellow paper is found, at sight of which General Farrish is stricken with paralysis. Kent discovers that Crandall has left town hurriedly. Andrew Elser, an aged banker, commits suicide about the same time as Katharine attempted her life. A yellow envelope is found in Elser's room. Post Office Inspector Davis, Kent's friend, takes up the case. Kent is convinced that Crandall is at the bottom of the mystery. Katharine's strange outcry puzzles the detectives. Kent and Davis search Crandall's room and find an address, Lock Box 17, Ardway, N. J. Kent goes to Ardway to investigate and becomes suspicious of a "Henry Cook." A woman commits suicide at the Ardway Hotel. A yellow letter also figures in this case. Kent calls Louise on the long distance telephone and finds that she had just been called by Crandall from the same booth. "Cook" disappears. The Ardway postmaster is missing. Inspector Davis arrives at Ardway and takes up investigation. He discovers that the dead woman is Sarah Becket of Bridgeport. Louise telephones Kent imploring him to drop the investigation. Kent returns to New York to get an explanation from Louise. He finds the body of a woman in Central Park and more yellow letters. He sees Crandall, whom he recognizes as "Cook," enter the Farrish home. Louise again implores Kent to drop the investigation and refuses to give any explanation. Later Kent sees Crandall and Louise in an automobile. Kent returns to Ardway. Davis announces that he has planned to arrest the missing postmaster and also the master criminal. While seeking the criminals Kent comes across Louise and Crandall. Pursued by Davis the postmaster jumps off a precipice and is killed. Aleck Young, the master criminal, is found in a hut in a morphine stupor. Louise tells Kent that she and Crandall had come to get papers from Young which gave him a strange hold over General Farrish.

CHAPTER XIII—(Continued.)

As if in corroboration of my words the three of them, Crandall, Davis and the constable, returned just at this moment.

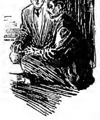
"Come, Miss Farrish," said Crandall. "I think it time I was starting home with you, if you feel able to travel. I have run the car up just outside the cottage. I think we can safely leave the completion of our mission to the inspector and Mr. Kent."

"I wish Mr. Kent was coming back with us," said Louise in a sweetly plaintive tone that made me long to gratify her wish.

"I need him here," said the inspector almost roughly.

"And that comes first for all of us," she said bravely.

I watched the automobile out of sight and then turned back into the cottage where I found the constable stretched on the floor, already fast asleep. Davis, sitting on the floor before some smoldering logs that had been placed in a rudely-constructed open fireplace, seemed wrapped in thought and did not even look up when I entered.



Nevertheless, I Seated Myself on the Floor Beside Him.

Nevertheless, I seated myself on the floor beside him and, placing my hand on his shoulder, I said once more: "And now I want to know all about it."

"Shut up," he said, savagely shaking off my hand. "Can't you see I want to think?"

Rebuffed and amazed by his rudeness I sprang to my feet, only to get a new surprise as, in tones as courteous as his others had been rude, he said: "If I were you, Harding, I'd follow the constable's example and try to get some sleep. You and I have a hard day ahead of us tomorrow."

Seeing that he was in no mood to be questioned, I smothered back the many things I wanted to ask him and stretched myself on the floor, not to sleep, but to ponder. As I reviewed the amazing events of today, of yesterday, of the day before, it seemed as if ages and ages—grim, mystifying, terrifying ages—had passed since that hour when I left my office light-hearted to call on Louise Farrish.

And the morning—the inspector had said—was to bring a hard day for both of us.

What new terror could tomorrow hold?

CHAPTER XIV.

The Inspector Explains.

Thump, thump, thump!

I had not thought slumber possible for me, and yet I must have slept. My bewildered senses, dazed by a sudden recall to activity, took subconscious cognizance of a regular, persistent pounding and, eventually, succeeded in stirring me to attention. I suddenly sat up and looked about me. I found myself in the deserted cottage, the drug slave still motionless on his couch and the logs still smoldering in the fireplace.

That thumping—I quickly saw where it came from. Davis was standing over the sleeping form of Dodds, the constable, engaged in the work of awakening him by the park policeman's method—kicking him on the soles of his shoes.

The process was successful. The constable snorted, drew up his legs, rubbed his eyes and sprang to his feet.

"It will be daylight in half an hour," I heard Davis tell him. "I want you to go and get the buckboard and drive around to where Rouser's body lies. Bring me any papers you find in his pockets. Leave his money and his watch and keys, so as not to arouse any suspicion of robbery. As soon as you have done that I want you to drive back and pick up the body before anyone else finds it. Drive with it to Millervale and leave it there. Don't talk too much. Tell everybody that you found the body at the foot of the precipice and impress on them that it must have been an accident in the dark. As soon as you can conveniently get away, come back here. Make sure, though, that nobody follows you."

As soon as the constable had gone, Davis lit a cigarette, turned up his coat collar and took a seat on a rough bench just outside the door.

"Come on out here, Harding, and watch the sun rise," he called to me.

I rose hastily from where I had been sitting gazing stupidly about me and joined him on the bench.

"There was something you wanted to ask me, wasn't there?" he said pleasantly.

There were so many things I wanted to ask him I hardly knew where to begin, but the first thing I blurted out was:

"Is Hugh Crandall guilty?"

"He is guilty only of being in love with Katharine Farrish against her father's wishes," he replied.

"But surely," I said doggedly, "he has some connection with the crime of the yellow letters. He knew Young. He knew where to find him. There are many things about his actions that to my mind call for explanation."

"Did you notice his eyes?" asked Davis. It was still too dark for me to see the inspector's face, but I felt sure that he was laughing at me. He made me feel that way all too often.

"I didn't," I answered rather crossly, "but what's that got to do with it?"

"I'm afraid, Kent, as I have said before, you will never make a good detective. You are entirely too unobservant of important details. Do you recall my asking early in our investigation whether or not Crandall had blue eyes?"

"Yes," I grudgingly admitted, "I recall it."

"As soon as I discovered that Crandall had blue eyes that eliminated him as the probable criminal."

"I don't see your logic."

"I've told you before," said Davis, after a pause long enough to permit him to light another cigarette, "that there are classes of crime and types of criminals, each strongly marked after its own sort. I saw right at the start that this crime was of the hidden sort, of the kind that includes conspiracy, blackmail, secret plotting—the kind that requires a skilful sneak. You never in your life found a blue-eyed sneak. There are lots of blue-eyed desperadoes and burglars. Most of the notorious bad men of the west were blue-eyed, but you don't find a man with blue eyes shooting or stabbing a man in the back or kidnapping a child or writing blackmailing letters."

While I was not at all convinced by his argument, I felt that it would be useless for me to dispute it, for I would be invading comparatively unknown territory, whereas he undoubtedly had dozens of cases at his finger-tips ready to illustrate his theory. I decided to change the subject.

"I recall, too," I said, "that you asked if Crandall was left-handed. So far as I saw, he is not. What of that? Is that another proof of Crandall's innocence?"

"No," said Davis, "that didn't prove Crandall's innocence. It proved Rouser's guilt. In fact it was the left-handed clue that put me on the right track and eventually led me to this very cottage."

"For Heaven's sake," said I impatiently, "don't talk in riddles. Go on and explain it."

"You're not to blame," he continued calmly, "for not having seen the left-handed clue. You lack the education. Only a person who had seen hundreds and hundreds of envelopes and had studied them closely would have observed it. You remember that a policeman brought me part of a yellow envelope that had been found in old Andrew Elser's room. On it was a stamp and part of the postmark. The first thing that I noticed was that the stamp was put on crooked. This might mean much or nothing. A left-handed person stamping a letter invariably gets the stamp on crooked. It ordinarily is put in the upper right hand corner of the envelope. A right-handed person stamping a letter has the two edges of the envelope as a guide. Try putting on a stamp with your left hand and you will see that your hand comes in such a position that the edges of the envelope are hidden and in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the stamp is out of plumb."

"I still fail to see," I said stubbornly, "why you did not suspect Crandall. There were many things that seemed to point to him—his telephoning to Katharine just before she shot herself, his sudden disappearance, the finding of the morphine syringe in his rooms, the Ardway address in his notebook, coupled with the fact that General Farrish had forbidden him the house. I do not see how you could help suspecting him."

"I'll admit that on the surface these things did look damaging, but against this was the one important fact that he was too well-balanced—too sane, if I might put it that way. I quickly learned that he was a reputable business man, that he was one of the governors in two clubs, and you yourself informed me that Katharine Farrish had thought highly of him. No well-balanced men commit crimes of this sort."

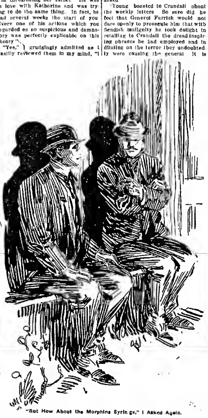
"Do you mean to tell me," I cried angrily, "that all criminals are insane?"

"Yes," said Davis thoughtfully, "I mean exactly that. The time will come when our courts will not be punitive but curative. Men are criminals because they can not help it. The great well-balanced majority of people see that in the observance of the laws the community has made for itself lies the only hope of a happy, regular life. The unbalanced few, the unhealthy product of unfit parents, in their poor misshapen brains are unable to comprehend this. They become the rebels against authority, the slaves of alcohol and narcotics, like that poor devil in there. They can not help themselves. It's the fault of their parents, it's the shape of their heads, it's the diseased condition of their nerves. It's our fault for not taking the same care in breeding the human race that we would in breeding horses or dogs."

"Oh, bosh," said I. "I ask you how you account for the hypodermic syringe in Crandall's rooms and I get a sermon."

"Lawyer though you are," retorted Davis, "I'm afraid that you are weak in logic. Having decided that Crandall had no criminal connection with the case, what then? I set up the theory that his connection was exactly the same as your own. You were in love with Louise and were determined to trace the hidden danger that was threatening her father. He was in love with Katharine and was trying to do the same thing. In fact, he had several weeks the start of you. Every one of his actions which you regarded as so suspicious and damnatory was perfectly explicable on this theory."

"Yes," I grudgingly admitted as I hastily reviewed them in my mind, "I suppose they could all be explained in that way."



"But How About the Morphine Syringe," I Asked Again.

"The question then came to me," continued Davis, "how could Crandall have known of the hidden danger that threatened General Farrish? It was highly improbable that the general would confide a thing of this sort, either to his daughter or to her fiance. He must have come on it in some other way. I judged that when he revealed his knowledge to the general, the letter, in fear that his daughter might learn what he had been trying to keep from her, in rage ordered Crandall from the house.

"The only logical way for Crandall to be restored to favor was for him to clear up the mystery that was menacing the general. As he had been at work there for some time, I felt sure that in his rooms we would find a clue to the address of the persons we were seeking. I was confident, too, that affairs were approaching a crisis. Crandall apparently had taken Katharine into his confidence. It looked as if some plan they might have made had failed and that this failure had driven Katharine to despair. With the lock box in Ardway as a clue, with the left-handed stamp as evidence and with Crandall's movements to watch, I felt certain that we could quickly solve the whole mystery."

"But now about the morphine syringe?" I asked again.

"I hardly gave it a second thought. For all I knew, it may have come there by accident, yet Crandall quickly explained its presence in the talk that I have just had with him. He kept this chap, Young, there in his rooms for two weeks, trying to worm out of him the secret with which Young had been trying to blackmail the old general. When Young disappeared he left the syringe behind him."

"So," I exclaimed in excitement, "the mystery of the yellow letter was a blackmailing plot against General Farrish."

"No," said Davis, "I don't think the Farrish case had anything to do with the other chain of suicides unless it was that both devilish plots originated in the drug-fevered, malevolent brain of the poor fellow in yonder. It is true that General Farrish got yellow letters. Once a week for months and months he has found one in his mail, each more threatening, more menacing than its predecessors. He has for a long, long time been living in daily dread that the anonymous writer of these letters might at any moment carry out his threats and expose him to public shame, and disgrace him in the eyes of his beloved daughters."

"But how did you learn all this?" I asked.

"Young boasted to Crandall about the weekly letters. So sure did he feel that General Farrish would not dare openly to prosecute him that with fiendish malignity he took delight in retailing to Crandall the dread-inspiring phrases he had employed and in dilating on the terror they undoubtedly were causing the general. It is small wonder that the sight of you and Louise examining the scrap of one of the yellow letters, coming as it did right on top of Katharine's desperate act, brought on a stroke of paralysis."

"Poor old man," I said, "how he must have suffered!"

"Far more than we can imagine," said Davis. "I do not think any one but a half-crazed drug fiend, either, could have conceived such refinement of torture as of always using the same peculiar yellow stationery."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Severe On His Own Work

Artist Critic at Least Proved That He Was Above Suspicion of Playing Favorites.

Orenville Redmond has arrived in the foremost ranks of California's artists. Having recognized himself, after years of striving, he feels competent to pass upon the merits of his contemporary artists.

Recently he left a picture on exhibition at a San Francisco gallery. In the course of the week he went to the place to see how the sale was progressing.

In company with Morcom, the picture dealer, and a few art students, he fell to discussing the pictures.

Every artist therein represented fell under the stroke of his hammer—Keith, Hill, Yard, Judson, Burgdorff, Short, Best, Peters, Latimer, Hansen—all came in for their share of cutting criticism. A word or two at most sufficed to finish them. Redmond made his comments the more substantial by writing them on the margin of the catalogue.

"And this," said Morcom, pointing at last to the picture painted by Redmond, "what do you think of this?"

Redmond was game.

He seized his paper and, quick as a flash, wrote down his criticism:

"Damned rotten."

A Plausible Story.

Lady—Why are you wandering around the country, I should like to know, instead of staying at home and taking care of your family?

Tramp—You see, mum, my wife had a very good servant girl—a regular jewel, mum.

"That doesn't seem possible."

"There never was but one perfect girl, and my wife had her, mum."

"Mercy! What a lucky woman!"

"Yes, mum, so my wife often said. But, you see, mum, the girl didn't like me."

"She didn't?"

"No, mum. She said my wife would have to discharge her or me, so she discharged me."

"Oh, I see. Here's some money."—New York Weekly.

MICHIGAN FOOTBALL PLAYERS GIVEN "M'S."

The list follows: Captain George C. Thompson, Cadillac, Mich.; Clement Quinn and O. C. Carpell, Saginaw, Mich.; James R. Craig, R. H. Torbet, George C. Paterson and James W. Raynesford, Detroit; Miller H. Pontius, Circleville, Ohio; H. H. Huebel and W. H. Collette, Menominee, Mich.; Ernest Almendinger, Ann Arbor, Mich.; Michael Boyle, Duluth, Minn.; Charles Barton, Louisville, Ky.; Thomas Bushnell, Cleveland, Ohio; E. E. Hughitt, Escanaba, Mich.; James C. Musser, Akron, Ohio, and William Cole, Cedar Springs, Mich.

ATTELL'S START AS FIGHTER

Began Career as "Tough Kid" in Streets of San Francisco—Made $200,000 as Pugilist.

Abe Attell is "down and out" in the parlance of the prize ring, according to those experts who witnessed his last two decisive defeats. Judging from his performances in those encounters, he can't "come back," in the opinion of those same experts. It is said he is inclined to feel a little that way himself.

But Abe is a philosopher if nothing else. He reviewed his fourteen years of fighting the other day. Until he was vanquished by Kilbane Abe was featherweight champion of the world. He has fought over 250 times.

He has fought more champions than any other man now in the ring, and has defended his title every time a 122-pound man could get the offer of a purse and suggested his complicity.

He has fought perhaps 3,000 rounds in all.

He does not use tobacco in any form, nor has he ever tipped the goblet. He is twenty-eight years old.

"It's been a pretty good game," he said, reflectively. "Of course I'm kind of sore when I think of all the money I've let get away from me.

"Four of us began together in San Francisco," he continued. "There were Jimmy Britt and Eddie Hanlon and Frankie Neil and myself. We were all kids together, fighting preliminaries about the same time. The others are all done for now. I'm the only one that's left in the ring."

A little later he recollected that his ring career had netted him something more than $200,000. He began as a "tough kid" in the San Francisco streets. He is a bit proud of that early record, too.

"So," said Attell, "by and by a kid would come to my mother's store—or maybe he'd meet me in the street and call me a 'Jew,' or we'd catch him in the alley, and then I'd murder 'him.'"

The process of "murdering" kids was helpful to his shoulder muscles, but began to disturb the neighbors.

"So my mother had me sent away to a reform school," said Abe, "and I stayed there for fifteen months. When I got back I remember all the kids around on the street yelling 'Abie's home.' I said I'd be good. But one of the kids I used to murder—his name was Wires—had been fighting preliminaries, and he had won twenty-nine straight fights. All the kids told me to go in and clean him. Alex. Greggains used to pay $15 for preliminary fights then.

"By and by some of the kids went to Greggains and told him they had a kid who could lick any of his prelim fighters. One of 'em said he was my manager, and Greggains made a match right away with Eddie Lenny.

"I won that fight without a scratch and I gave the $15 to my ma. Every time I won—and I won thirty-four fights straight with a knockout—I gave her my dough."

Billiardist Believes in Himself.

Melbourne Inman, the present champion English style billiard player, is expected back in London soon from his visit to Australia. He is reported willing to give any English player 1,000 points in a match of 18,000 for a bet of $500 up to $1,250 a side.

Walsh's Big Feat.

Ed Walsh, the big reel, who is said to be the greatest twirler of today, pitched 403 1-3 innings this season. He allowed 247 hits, which is less than one per inning.

FIGHTERS NOW LACK PUNCH

Few of Modern Pugilists Possess Sufficient Force in Their Blows to Produce Knockout.

Few fighters of the present day are gifted with the "punch," say experts of the game. The boxers either spar for time and drag along for draw decisions or the sporting world must be forced to the conclusion that there is a dearth of battlers of old of the type of Nelson in his prime, Fitzsimmons, McGovern and Ketchell. This trio, especially Fitz and Ketchell, had wallops like kicks from a mule.

Billy Papke of Kewanee, a contemporary of Ketchell, is still living, to be sure, and only recently defeated Carpenter, champion middleweight of France, but Papke at his best is only a shadow of the husky lad who gave Ketchell the battles of his life.

Johnny Kilbane has yet to demonstrate that he possesses the punch, and Wolgast is dabbling around in limit contests without handing his opponents the K. O. potions.

Fighters must have the wallop to make the greatest successes and shine as drawing cards like Battling Nelson, Joe Gans, Stanley Ketchell, Fitzsimmons and Jeffries.

In the heavyweight division there is not one fighter of class who deserves to eat the crumbs from the table of the old timers so far as real fighting ability is concerned. Old speckled Bob Fitzsimmons might clean out the whole bunch in a single night were he in his prime.

There is no pugilist who is to the fight game what Frank Gotch is to wrestling. Had Gotch been a prize fighter, instead of a grappler, he might have remained the champion of the world for many years. He has speed, endurance, weight, strength and a wonderful brain. He would have raised the level of pugilism just as he has elevated wrestling.

Notes of Sportdom

Wolgast rather than saw off a leg will tackle the welter weights.

Joe Wood of the Red Sox is bugs on aeroplanes and talks of buying one.

It was announced some time ago that Chick Evans would retire from golf for business.

Rube Marquard's advertising may boost him in vaudeville, but not in advanced baseball.

It looks as if Oscar Vitt will take care of the third base corner for the Tigers next season.

Ralph Works, the former Detroit pitcher, will draw salary from Garry Herrmann next season.

Joe Jackson, says a report, is the first holdout, but Felix Chouinard may assert he had a scoop on that.

Hal Chase, the great first baseman, may never play baseball again. He has started to play basket ball.

Peckey McFarland said he might retire, but goes right on training for fear something might turn up.

Jack Powell and Jimmy Stephens of the Browns are going to get the can next spring, according to reports.

Spanking may prove effective as a punishment for nonthinking football plays, but it wouldn't do in baseball. It has been tried and failed.

Starrett, the Princeton man who finished the season with the New York Americans, says if Tol Pendleton should turn "pro" he will join the Yankees.

Harry Wolverton will get a big salary for a minor league manager as leader of the Sacramento club in the Pacific Coast league, according to reports.

Looks as if Eddie Plank was going after the record held by Cy Young—that of being the grand old man of the pitching world. Eddie broke into the game eleven years ago and has been a winner ever since.

SHARP TEETH OF RODENTS KILL TREES

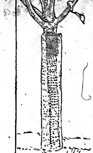
Corn Stalks for Protection.



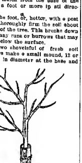
The Wire Screen.

(By F. H. BALLOU.)

Mice rarely injure trees except where grass, strawy manure, boards or trash of some kind about the base of the tree prove a hiding place, as they prefer to perform their depredations under cover. In mounding fruit trees, first clear away the grass, trash or mulch from the base of the tree for a foot or more in all directions.

With the foot, or, better, with a post tamper, thoroughly firm the soil about the base of the tree. This breaks down and fills any runs or burrows that may be just below the surface.

With two shovelsful of fresh soil or cinders make a small mound, 12 or 14 inches in diameter at the base and from four to six inches high about the stem of the tree, firming the soil well.



Young Apple Tree With Wood Veneer Wrapper, Having the Earth Mounded Around It for Protection Against Both Rabbits and Borers.

The tops of these small mounds are usually kept quite bare by the sweeping force of the winter winds, even if there be several inches of snow on the ground. Mice will not venture out in these exposures to feed on the bark of the trees and burrowing into the freshly packed soil is not likely to be attempted in the winter even in open weather.

The mounds may be left throughout the year, but they should be tamped hard and repaired each autumn. Cinders are most excellent material for this purpose as mice will not burrow through them.

The wire screen is an ideal and complete all round protector and is given first place among the mechanical forms. Being light and open it prevents the least obstruction to the strong winds, the air and sunshine are freely admitted and no dark places of concealment, such as invite the wooly aphis and other forms of insect life are afforded.

Use galvanized wire cloth of ¼-inch mesh. The 24-inch width being the most convenient for apple trees. Cut into 12-inch sections they should be carefully bent or rolled over a small round piece of wood, allowing the edges to lap about one inch. The cylinders are then placed about the trees, where their own tension will close them securely.

One-inch mesh poultry netting will protect the trees against rabbits, but not from mice, but in combination with a slight mound of soil about the base of tree, mice will rarely prove troublesome.

There is no device superior in effectiveness against rabbits and ground hogs as corn stalks, and certainly none cheaper for the farm orchard. A good plan is to take the bundles of stover as they come from the field, square off the butts and cut off a two-foot length of the lower ends of the stalk.

These sections may be fed to the stock even in a manger or in the feed lot, where the blades will be cleanly and neatly stripped off.

Five or six stalks bound firmly about the stem of a young tree, with twine or short sections of wire, will constitute a protector that will last for several seasons. The stalks readily yield as the stem of the tree increases in size.

In case wire ties are used for binding on the stalk these must be removed from about the tree when the stalks are taken off, or they will drop down about the collar of the tree and become covered with soil and forgotten. Trees have been killed by wire-girdling in this way.

It is difficult to treat young trees successfully that have been barked by rabbits or other predatory animals. Whether any treatment will succeed or not depends largely on how bad the girdling is. If the bark is taken off clear around the tree so as to expose the wood, the only remedy is to bridge graft. This is done by inserting a scion both above and below the wound, and, of course, cannot readily be done except in spring. While this can be done successfully, it is impractical for a young tree, and the chances are that it would be more profitable to pull out the tree and re-set with new stock.

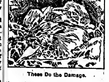
If the girdling is not particularly severe it can be helped by trimming the ragged edges of the bark with a sharp knife, then covering the surface with grafting wax or other material to keep the wood from drying out till new bark grows over and heals the wound.

A great many newly planted trees die because of carelessness in filling the hole. It is important that this work be carefully done. If the soil which was removed from the bottom of the excavation be hard and lumpy, it should be placed to one side and the surface soil used first in filling. The main thing to remember in filling is that every part of the root system should be in contact with the soil. Unless it is, the exposed areas will be points for the loss of moisture and the drying out of the roots.

The soil surrounding the roots must be fine if they are to be well covered. Either loosen the soil in the bottom of the hole or throw in two or three spadesful of loose earth so that when the tree is put in it will sink sufficiently into the soil so that all under surfaces will be in good contact with it. The soil may then be filled in, using the fine soil first and compacting it well around the roots.

There is little danger of compacting the soil too much, unless it be of a clayey nature and somewhat moist.

After the first few spadesful have been put in the soil may be packed tramping. Be careful in compacting the soil not to crowd the tree out of place. The soil should not be mounded at the base of the tree above the natural level of the land, the top two inches being left as loose and fine as possible.



These Do the Damage.

Don't Lose the Eggs.

As ducks lay during the night, or early morning, all the eggs can be saved by proper management. To insure this, it becomes necessary to shut them in their rooms or pens at dusk for the night, and as they are careless about where they deposit their eggs, it is best to have (besides the nest) the door well covered with dry soil, which, in addition to absorbing all moisture and keeping the door clear of filth, will protect from injury eggs that might otherwise be lost. Ducks are quite regular layers after they once begin, usually laying an egg every 24 hours. To induce them to come in at nights it is best to feed them at that time, and in the morning before they are let out. Treated thus, they will soon learn to come home at sundown for their accustomed food, and are readily secured. At the proper time in the morning the eggs are collected, the ducks fed and then allowed their freedom for the day.

Two or More Varieties.

Do not plant an orchard of one variety only. Even good self-pollenizers will probably be more satisfactory if two or more varieties are set together than when the orchard is limited to one alone.

Give Plenty of Sunshine.

We like poultry houses where sunshine can penetrate every corner of the poultry house at some hour of the day. The fowls can with proper care and precaution be protected while on the roost at night. Even in cold weather, give them plenty of sunshine. Keep them exercising and they will keep healthy and fill the egg basket. Fresh air will never hurt a flock of fowls if a little common sense is mixed with their care. Dark, damp poultry houses and an unwarranted accumulation of filth will render any flock of fowls unproductive and make them an easy prey to disease.

Sprouts and Grains.

Malt sprouts are the dried shoots from germinated barley. Brewers' grains are the barley grains, from which the starch has been removed by growth and fermentation. In fresh state they contain too much water to justify paying a very large price. Dried, they furnish about as much protein as the malt sprouts.

MAKING FOR HEALTH

SYSTEMATIC DAILY EXERCISE A NECESSITY OF LIFE.

Future Health of Children Depends Largely Upon the First Years of Their Upbuilding—Fresh Air the Vital Point.

It is really pathetic to see young girls and women who for the want of a little systematic daily exercise are thin, pallid and weakly. Many women are really not what they make themselves believe they are. At the slightest exertion they say they are fatigued—all fagged out, unable to do anything else for the rest of the day. This feeling is really just a habit that they have acquired and should get rid of as soon as possible. If you want to live long and be healthy get the notion out of your head that every little thing tires you all out, and that it is impossible to do more than a few regular, necessary little duties every day.

Unless a woman is badly ill or crippled there is no reason why she cannot send the blood bounding through all her veins in such a manner as to stamp the glow of health upon her entire body. Mothers of large families with a household to superintend have not much time, I know, but it is their duty to see that their children take some form of exercise daily aside from the regular routine. Their future health and life depend upon it. Dozens and dozens of sickly and consumptive children are being saved yearly by hygienic habits, fresh air, sunshine and exercise.

It is not necessary to adopt exercises which take up a great deal of time unless one wishes to and has the time to give, nor is it necessary to have all sorts of apparatus to obtain the best results in exercising. One of the best built women I ever saw told me the other day that she exercised ever since she could remember, and never had any bought instruments for her work. Everything was home-made. To their use and to sunshine and pure, fresh air, she owes all that she is today.

It is an easy thing to add a simple exercise to one's regular toilet work in the morning and again a little at night before retiring. It may be just learning to breathe properly. Yet this alone can save you from a cold or perhaps something more serious.

In the morning when you awake, if possible, have someone come into your room before you rise and throw wide your windows if they have not been fully open throughout the night. Lie limp in bed. Inhale through the nose. Fill your lungs to their fullest capacity and then slowly exhale. Do this at least four times or six if you wish. Just before retiring at night, and without any restrictive clothing, stand at an open window with hands on hips, thumbs pointed backward and while inhaling rise slowly upon the toes, hold the breath while counting three, and slowly, while exhaling, drop back upon the feet. Repeat a half dozen times. Six minutes night and morning is all that is necessary. The true value of that twelve minutes of exercise every day, if continued for five or six months, will be so fully apparent that if it required twice the amount of time you could not be tempted to give it up.

If the coming generation is to be strong and healthy the present one must pave the way, and to do this parents and children alike must take some active exercise.

IN VELVET AND VELVETEEN

Gorgeous Wraps Are to Be a Feature of Styles That Will Mark the Coming Season.

Velvet and velveteen are to be used again this winter in the composition of comfortable and handsome outer wraps. These have many points of usefulness, which fully accounted for their great popularity last year and in the spring. They are, however, only suitable for wearing over short skirts which do not need holding up, and even so they are apt to be in the way on muddy days, for it is very difficult to cleanse mud stains from velvet.

On the other hand, they frequently save the trouble of changing the dress, since they lend a sufficiently afternoon appearance to the figure even when they are worn over comparatively plain costumes. They also form an admirable background for furs, with a glimpse of lace at the throat.

A smart model has a turned-back collar of sailor shape not extended in long revers to the waist, which forms a pleasant change. On the waist line it is fastened by a motif of folded black velvet and braid, and to this fastening it is drawn slightly up in fullness from the right to the left side. This gives it a very up-to-date air for anybody who has the patience to be eternally brushing.

Face of Serge.

If any who are puzzled to determine which is the right side of serge will follow this rule, given me some years ago by a worker in cloth, the difficulty will vanish, says a contributor in Needlecraft. Whenever there are diagonal lines in the weave, as in serge, or in the pattern, as in some suitings, these lines run from the upper right hand corner to the lower left-hand, on the right side. In many materials other than serge, these diagonal lines may be seen, such as merino, cashmere, and even broadcloth, though not so evident in the latter.

Window Basket.

A beautiful yet inexpensive hanging basket can be made by cutting off a good-sized carrot about four inches from the top; hollow out the cut end to form a sort of cup; put a small stick through the carrot and hang top down in a sunny window. Keep the carrot filled with water and in a short time the beautiful fern-like leaves will appear and grow up over the carrot, says the Ladies' World. Try this now and have an attractive bit of green in your window next winter.

Social Forms and Entertainments

A Budget of Queries

Will you please tell me if it is necessary to thank or express your pleasure to a young gentleman each time after he has taken you to a place of amusement providing you have been going with him steady?

Also, is it proper for a girl of eighteen to allow a young man to kiss her good night if she has been going with him steady for only four months?

Should a gentleman ask to call on a girl each time he wishes to see her or is it a girl's privilege to ask him to come and see her?—E. S. H. and P. J. H.

It is always polite to thank a person who has shown you any attention even if that person be a well-known friend. I consider it decidedly improper to kiss a man good night and ungentlemanly in him to ask it. He has no right to your kisses and will respect you much more if you hold yourself in reserve. It is not necessary to ask permission to call every time for among good friends it is understood that they are welcome.

Questions From "Brown Eyes."

I am very much interested in your corner of the paper and would like to ask you a few questions.

My birthday is in December, on the 15th. I would like to invite a few of my girl friends in the afternoon and some of my boy friends in the evening. I will be sixteen and will have them come on either Saturday or Monday.

How should I word the invitations? What shall I have for refreshments for the girls and boys after supper? How should I entertain them?

For this party I think I would ask the guests, tell the girls you want them to come in the afternoon and the boys in the evening for the ice cream and birthday cake.

After all have arrived why not have charades, acting out the words coffee (cough fee), dramatic (dram-attic), sinecure (sin e cure). You will find this makes good fun.

A Suitable Toast

Please give me a good toast to give at a Christian Endeavor society gathering.—X. Y. Z.

Try this, seems to me it ought to do very nicely:

To those who have passed me on the highway and gave greeting,
To the possible friends who have come my way whose eyes lingered as they fell on mine,
May they ever be eager with youth,
 and strong with fellowship.
May they never miss a welcome or want a comrade.—McGee.

Engaging the Minister.

Have read your valuable information in answer to questions and I want to ask you a few questions myself. When both parties concerned in a marriage attend the same church, which should engage the minister to perform the ceremony?—A. M. H.

In the instance mentioned, where both go to the same church, I think it would be best for the two to call together, or the "man in the case" may go alone, or the arrangements could be made by a letter to the minister from the bridegroom-elect.

Luncheon Menu.

I would be most grateful if you would outline for me a simple but correct luncheon menu.—Janet.

Bouillon. Breadsticks.
Chicken Croquettes. Green Peas.
Creamed Potatoes. Finger Rolls.
Waldorf Salad.
Wafers. Neufchatel Cheese.
Ice Cream. Claret Sauce.
Small Angel Cakes.
Coffee.

Guest Book Verses.

Kindly give me through your column verses suitable for a guest book.—A Daily Reader.

I think either of these quotations suitable:

"Dear Lord, I thank thee for my friends."

"Give to the world the best you have, and the best will come back to you."

To Use Advertisements.

Will you kindly tell me how to use advertisements at a party as a contest? By using a picture should they know the manufacturer?—J. A.

Use just the picture with the name of manufacturer left off. It is astonishing how much we do not know when it comes to guessing "ads," although they may be seen every day and all are familiar.

MADAME MERRI.

Large Flowers Worn.

In the spring we were all wearing tiny bunches of flowers. Now, with a graceful incongruity, we are pinning larger bunches on our tailored coats and among our furs. Whenever possible these breast bouquets are of real flowers—a cluster of carnations or roses. Even chrysanthemums and asters have been worn, though these are generally used to adorn the muff rather than the person of the wearer. A very pretty and delightfully unseasonable posy was made up from brown pansies. It is an odd notion to wear artificial flowers in summer and real in winter, but fashion has its whims and this is rather a charming one.

TROUBLE IN DINING ROOM

Little Mixup Between Ladies Accepted Philosophically by the Torpidville Landlord.

"At one time yesterday it looked like we was going to have a little trouble here in the dining room, but it didn't come to nothin' much," related the landlord of the Torpidville tavern. "Maxine and Sylphie, the young ladies that are waitin' table, got to squabblin' about a p'int of etiquette, or the merits of their respective fellers, or something that-a-way, as ladies is everlastin'ly doin', and Sylphie, I reckon it was, told Maxine, or mebby Maxine told Sylphie—nohow, one told the other that she wasn't no better than she ort to be. And Maxine, or Sylphie, whichever it was, got sorter fussy about it and answered that she was too, and she didn't care who knew it! And then they kind o' tied in on each other and went 'round and 'round as it were, and it took 'em quite a while after it was over to wash the ketchup and broken glass out of their coiffures, as they call their hair. But that's all it amounted to, and there's no use in firin' 'em, for ladies will be ladies and there ain't no help for it."—Kansas City Sun.

RASH ON FACE FOR 2 YEARS

Sioux Falls, S. D.—"My trouble of skin disease started merely as a rash on my face and neck, but it grew and kept getting worse until large scabs would form, fester and break. This was just on the one side of my face, but it soon scattered to the other side. I suffered a great deal, especially at night, on account of its itching and burning. I would scratch it and of course that irritated it very much. This rash was on my face for about two years, sometimes breaking out lots worse and forming larger sores. It kept me from sleeping day or night for a couple of months. My face looked disgraceful and I was almost ashamed to be seen by my friends.

"A friend asked me to try Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. I would bathe my face with hot water and a lot of Cuticura Soap, then I would put on the Cuticura Ointment. In less than two days' time, the soreness and inflammation had almost entirely disappeared, and in four weeks' time you could not see any of the rash. Now my face is without a spot of any kind. I also use them for my scalp and hair. They cured me completely." (Signed) Miss Pansy Hutchins, Feb. 6, 1912.

How to Bankrupt the Doctors

A prominent New York physician says, "If it were not for the thin stockings and thin-soled shoes worn by women the doctors would probably be bankrupt. When you contract a cold do not wait for it to develop into pneumonia but treat it at once. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is intended especially for coughs and colds, and has won a wide reputation by its cures of these diseases. It is most effectual and is pleasant and safe to take. For sale by all dealers.

Very Few Copperheads.

The copperhead, although deadly venomous, seldom attains a length of more than three feet, and is, fortunately, not plentiful, comparatively few people having ever seen one. Its favorite habitat is a rocky, mountainous woodland, and never an open meadow.

Mental Diseases.

Fear and apprehension make people nervous and sick. The thousand and one needless worries over the future are simply providence for the morrow gone mad. Fear of disease and death are normal; but to allow the mind to dwell on these things is to become a hypochondriac with no more stability than the leaf of the aspen.

His Inspiration.

Percolium (of the Daily Bread)—"My dear, you are not only my chief incentive to work, but my lifelong inspiration." Mrs. Percolium—"I know I'm your inspiration, all right, Percival. Whenever I mix a metaphor or make a little mistake in my grammar you turn it into a story and get pay for it."

Temporarily Postponed.

Whales May Live 500 Years.

The land animal which lives the longest probably is the tortoise. Under favorable conditions it will live to an age of 350 or 400 years. One died at the London Zoo which was said to have attained the age of 350 years. The ordinary whale lives to be 500 years old. No other animal of the sea lives to be that old.

They Won't Believe It.

Many people who do not deserve them have good neighbors.

Move On Now!

says a policeman to a street crowd, and whacks heads if it don't. "Move on now," says the big, harsh mineral pills to bowel congestion and suffering follows. Dr. King's New Life Pills don't bulldoze the bowels. They gently persuade them to right action, and health follows. 25c at Gehring's Pharmacy.

MODERN EDUCATION

More than one-half of the entire school population of the United States is rural. What becomes of these boys and girls who attend our rural schools? There is a great deal of agitation just now in our cities concerning what becomes of the boys and girls who attend the city schools. So anxious are some people getting over this that they are trying to follow them up after leaving school to find out what does become of them and whether they succeed in the occupations they choose. People are saying that this is a very serious question and that when 20,000 children in Chicago between fourteen and sixteen years of age drop out every year to go to work, that it is the duty of the citizens to know what kind of work they are going into, and whether they are fitted for it. But very little has been done in the country districts to discover what the children do there when they quit school and whether they succeed, whether the schooling they have had is sufficient for what they want to do. And yet more than one-half of your children live in the country and go to the country schools.

Is it not, then, quite as important to find out what this half does and how they fare in life's battle and whether we are doing our duty by them, as the other half? Is one half any more essential to the welfare of the nation than the other half? We used to be told that the backbone of the United States was in the country, and lists of names of men and women who had become noted were given in proof. Perhaps that is not so any longer since the great trend to the city has set in, but it nevertheless seems true that half our chances for raising noble, effective citizens for the future lie in the country. Not all these boys and girls stay on the farm, some of them do, but some of them drift to the city. Do they succeed there? Do they succeed as good farmers and farmers' wives? People in the city are telling us that children who leave school in the fifth grade to go to work cannot hold on even to what they were supposed to learn by that time, that eight grades should be the minimum of schooling any child should have who does not wish to drift about always in the very lowest kind of labor. Does it take any less intelligence for the country child to earn his living well than for the city child? And does he get the training that he needs? Supposing he does go through the eight grades are they so well taught that he comes out pretty well equipped to do something in life? High school, of course, ought to be the next goal, but what proportion go to high school? And are we taking pains to make the inducements such that good teachers will stay in the country more than one year? It is too often the case that a young high school graduate takes a country school to "try out" in, and then leaves for the city as soon as she can get a better position. The teacher cannot be blamed. It is up to the school board to hold on to her if she is a good one by making the inducements attractive enough. Most teachers are anxious to do good work as well as to earn their salary and will respond most heartily to any encouragements that are given.

Moreover it is said "that an amazingly low percentage of the teachers in rural schools have had any professional training." Why is it not quite as necessary for the teachers of one-half of our children to know something about their profession as the teachers of the other half?

Lake Erie College

The Coming Parcels Post

The time for the new parcels post is near at hand, and in a couple of weeks more people will begin to send packages at greatly reduced rates. It will be interesting to watch how the new arrangement works out. Some people expect great things from it, others think it will not amount to much. Meanwhile Uncle Sam is trying his best to guess how the people are going to take to it, and how much trouble he will have handling the increase of business.

The two classes most vitally interested are the farmers and the small town merchants, the former expecting great benefits, the latter fearing some detriment. As regards the farmer, the new law will apparently be a great convenience, though we could hardly use any stronger word than that. It will not be an economic factor of any great importance to him, because the amount of goods he will send or receive by mail will never determine his prosperity to any appreciable extent. It will be a distinct convenience, however, to be able to send mail packages cheaply, and to have such packages delivered cheaply at his door.

The possibility of marketing fresh produce in small lots is an interesting feature of the new law. Much has been made of this feature in reports from England, where farmers advertise butter, eggs and cream in the London papers and send these products direct to the consumers on mail orders. Doubtless this practice will be followed to some extent here. A "liner" in the paper advertising fresh eggs or Jersey cream doubtless would bring quick orders, and perhaps considerable revenue to those who went after that class of business in earnest.

As to the merchants, we are inclined to think that there is not so much ground for apprehension as some of them believe. Of course any reduction in mail rates tends to benefit the huge mail-order concerns, which make such enormous profits by selling a few articles at a loss and selling a great many at a high profit. We doubt, however, whether this trade will be appreciably increased, for mail order business has a natural limit. The delay in delivery, the impossibility of previous inspection or selection, and the fact that mail order prices are often higher than local retail prices, all tend to put a limit on that class of trade.

It must not be forgotten also that a cheap parcels post will benefit local merchants as much as it will benefit the distant mail-order house. In fact it ought to benefit the local merchant more, because the postage rates inside the first or 50-mile zone are much less than the rates from Chicago. Undoubtedly local merchants will do a large amount of local mail-order business in such articles as can easily be sold and delivered in that manner.

Of course time alone will determine what the actual worth of the new system will be. But, as we remarked before, we are inclined to the view that both its advantages and its disadvantages have been overestimated, and that after all it is to be classed among the conveniences, rather than among the important factors in the world of business and domestic economy.

ABOUT PEOPLE AND PLACES

There seems to be no let up in the building boom in Painesville.

—o—

Jerry Palmer, of Willoughby, was in Painesville on business Monday.

—o—

Mr. Roosevelt knows an "angel" when he sees one and he is not going to let Mr. Perkins get away.

—o—

The Ashtabula County Bull Moosers announce that they will place a full county ticket in the field two years hence.

—o—

It looks now as though that Bull Moose party was here to stay, and there is pretty good rank and file in Lake county to begin with.

—o—

That new book "Lake County Illustrated" would make a fine holiday present to mail to your friend, a former resident of the county.

—o—

Congressman Wm. Gordon, entertained the members of the Congressional committee at his home in Cleveland last Thursday evening.

—o—

W. L. Baker is building an addition to the postoffice building to accommodate the new parcels post business, which it is believed will require much more room.

—o—

The Christmas display of goods by Painesville merchants surpasses anything ever known in Lake county. For genuine holiday bargains it is not necessary to go to Cleveland.

—o—

Mr. Arlie Abramson, of this city, will leave Wednesday, Dec. 25th for New York City, where he has accepted a position with M. Lesser in the Shedreign Silpon and Raincoat Co.

—o—

The Lardies have issued invitations for Friday evening, December 27, at half after eight o'clock to meet Mr. and Mrs. Philip Viall. The dance and reception will be given in the city hall auditorium.

—o—

Donald, the 20-months-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Austie H. Prentice, was badly scalded Monday on the left side of the face and shoulder. The little one got in the way of his mother, who was carrying hot water.

—o—

There will be a hop at McConnell's on the old Corlett place in Concord, one-fourth mile west of Wilsons Corners on the night of Dec. 25. Welcome to all friends, old and new. Good music and a jolly time. Admission 50c.

—o—

John E. Smith, member of the firm of Canfield & Smith, insurance dealers, dropped dead in the Chardon post office last Thursday evening. Mr. Smith was a prominent democrat in Chardon and was well known here. He leaves a wife and one son.

—o—

If the authorities of the county, township and city of Painesville, would get together some winter evening and decide to have Painesville and Fairport connected with a paved street, we would admit there was a Santa Claus for all of us.

—o—

The new book "Lake County Illustrated" is now for sale at
J. E. LIGHTNER'S
GEO. A. LORD & SON'S
R. E. JACKSON'S
THE HERALD OFFICE
The price to all is 50 cents per copy.

—o—

Jos. Rosenberg has sold his interest in the business of the Metallic Binding Co. to his partner Percy K. Smith. Mr. Rosenberg will retire from active business for at least a year on account of poor health. The Metallic Binding Co. is one of the best industrial concerns in Painesville and will continue to grow under Mr. Smith's management.

—o—

The window display at the Up-to-Date store is quite a study in the art of decoration. One window represents an exterior or outside winter scene, while the other window represents an inside display. The west window is set off by a novel electrical illumination. This display is the work of Ralph Abramson, the advertising man of the local firm.

—o—

The G. G. Grant store is one of the busiest places in the city just at this time of the year. This large store of three distinct departments would be a credit to a city twice the size of Painesville. The completeness of all departments, the elegant window displays, and above all the courteous and pleasant ways of the employes has been the subject of comment by local buyers and has brought forth exclamations of pleasant surprise from people who are newcomers to our little city.

Makes The Nation Gasp

INJUNCTION ISSUED

Which Stops Work on New Post Office Addition

W. L. Baker, owner of the post-office block on East Main street was Monday [illegible] enjoined from building an addition to his property directly in the rear of the present postoffice by E. O. Huntington, who is the owner of the Shedd block. Huntington claims right of way to East Main street back of his property and has an abstract giving a right of way six feet wide to support his claim.

The building of the postoffice addition would not only cut off the Huntington property from a rear entrance but would also cut off the George P. Burridge property. It is said Baker had started on the foundation when an injunction was served upon him.

The new addition to the postoffice was intended to house the parcels post department.

COUNCIL MEETING

Interesting Discussion of New Municipal Government

At the council meeting on Monday evening that body was addressed by Attorney B. C. Shepherd and Attorney M. A. Tuttle on the matter of changing the form of the present city government. At the recent constitutional election it was voted to grant the cities of this state the right to home rule. The attorneys spoke of having a special election called to elect a commission of fifteen citizens who should draft and submit a charter for a new form of city government. City Solicitor George C. von Beseler also submitted an ordinance as the first step in the proposed change.

COUNTY FAIR

Report Shows That Expenses Were All Paid and Then Some

A meeting of the board of directors of the Lake County Agricultural society was held in the township trustees' office on Main street, Monday evening.

A financial statement submitted by the secretary shows the receipts of the recent fair to be about $11,000.00, the premiums, purses and expenses about $3,500.00, leaving a balance of about $1,500.00.

This is an excellent showing, considering the enormous expense for all supplies and proper advertising for the first exhibition of the kind in the county in eighteen years.

Instruction in Practical Farming

The practical benefit to be derived from the winter courses in agriculture at the Ohio State University is emphasized by many former students. Mr. Stanley Oerber, of Hamilton, O., says, "I think a young man who intends to be a farmer could not put his time to better advantage than to go to Columbus and take a short course in agriculture. I shall never regret the time spent there; I enjoyed that course more than all the rest of my schooling." Mr. J. W. Carey, of Waynesville, Ohio, says, "The short course has been of much value to me. I have forty acres of land and the knowledge I gained at the University enabled me to produce this year 67 bushels of oats per acre and 75 bushels of corn. My neighbors said I could learn more by staying home and reading but now they think differently. There are two young men here who are going to take the course this winter." Arthur Amen, of Rockland, O., says, "I have never begrudged the expense or time spent at the University. Not only the studies but the meeting with other young men and hearing their experiences is worth a great deal to anyone. The friendships formed are also worthy of consideration." The courses begin this winter, on January 6 and continue to February 28, and are open to Ohio farmers and their sons.

Big Show At Columbus

January 9 and 10, 1913, will be red letter days at the Ohio State University, when the annual corn and grain show, officially known as the "Battle of the Kernels," and the annual meeting of the Ohio Plant Breeders' Association will be the center of attraction. Mr. C. G. Williams, of the Ohio Experiment Station, and Dr. A. W. Gilbert, of Cornell University, are among the speakers for the occasion. Over $210 in special and $52 in cash premiums are offered for the corn and small grains exhibited by agricultural students. The classification includes corn, wheat, oats and barley. Judges will be persons outside the University competent to make the awards. Samples must be selected by the exhibitor. All winter course students are eligible to compete and they are requested to select their samples before coming to Columbus January 6. A corn banquet will be held on the evening of January 10. The general public is invited to the show and meeting.

A Farm Lecture Course

An agricultural lecture course with over 100 members, all farmers, is reported from Chuckery, a little crossroads village in Union county, Ohio. The lectures are given in the village high school on Friday evenings. Tickets for the course of five numbers sell at 75 cents each. The school board has furnished the building with new lights and new seats for the occasion. Subjects dealing with dairying, soil fertility, feeding of farm animals, etc., are on the program to be discussed by Professors Erf and Bear, Ohio State University, B. E. Carmichael, Ohio Experiment Station; and A. P. Sandles, Ohio State Board of Agriculture. The course was organized by A. F. Elliott and Richard Olshop, two former O. S. U. students.

A New Orchard Bulletin

A new farmers' reading course bulletin, entitled "Buying Nursery Stock" by Wendell Paddock, Professor of Horticulture, has been issued by the College of Agriculture, Ohio State University. It explains the methods of propagating nursery stock, describes a good nursery tree, discusses the time of planting, how and where to buy, etc. Persons wishing this bulletin should address A. B. Graham, Ohio State University, Columbus, O. It is free.

A Swell Time

That's what the Knights of the Maccabees are going to have on New Year's eve, Dec. 31. They are going to have a regular masked ball.

Auto Owners Are Particular

Requests for certain numbers to adorn their autos fore and aft have been received by State authorities from every county. At least [illegible] persons want No. 1. Several requests have been made for the old policy number 41144. Even No. 13 is popular. Hundreds want the same number as their house or phone. Gov. Harmon wants No. 77, which he has had for years. The numbers are granted, if not too large, usually to the persons first asking for them.

Grange Officers

T. C. Laylin, for the past four years worthy master of the Ohio state grange, was unanimously re-elected to that position at the bi-ennial election of officers of the grange at the business session in Salem Thursday, against the opposition of two worthy opponents, L. G. Spencer and R. W. Dunlap. The term is for two years. L. J. Tabor of Barnesville, who has administered the office of state lecturer for a number of years in a most praiseworthy manner, received ample recognition by the ballots of his fellow grangers receiving every vote cast for this office.

The full list of officers of the state grange elected at this time, and installed at the Thursday evening session, is as follows: Worthy master, T. C. Laylin, Norwalk; worthy lecturer, L. J. Tabor, Barnesville; overseer, B. J. Pierce, Warren; steward, A. W. Caldwell, Olenford, Licking county; chaplain, Mrs. Laura Garside, Butler township, Columbiana county; treasurer, O. J. Oemuth, New Philadelphia, secretary, Eugene F. Cranz, Ira Summit county, gatekeeper, George Whaley, Montpelier, Williams county; lady assistant steward, Miss Anna Weaver, Ashville, pomona, Mrs. Mamie Sheets, Stark county; ceres, Mrs. J. J. Robinson; Stryker, Williams county; flora, Mrs. H. C. Oelwiler, Sasil, Fairfield county; member of executive committee, O. T. Watle.

It was also decided at this meeting by ballot, that the annual session in December, 1913, should be held in Lima, if arrangements can be made by the executive committee.

AMERICAN AMBASSADOR TO ENGLAND DIES AT HIS PALATIAL LONDON HOME.

WAS IN BED BUT SHORT TIME

Diplomat's Breakdown Dates From His Trip to New York Last Winter—Had Been Sufferer From Asthma for Years.

London, England.—Whitelaw Reid, American ambassador to the court of St. James, died at Dorchester House, his palatial London home, at ten minutes after noon Dec 15. Only his wife and daughter, the Hon. Mrs. John Hubert Ward, were at the bedside when the end came.

Contrary to many reports, the ambassador did not take to his bed until Friday night, when for the first time he consented to turn over all official correspondence to Irwin Laughlin, first secretary of the embassy. Until that time the ambassador believed himself suffering merely from the effects of the cold which he caught Nov. 11 when he addressed the students of the University College of Wales at Aberystwyth.

As late as Friday the ambassador sent a large number of dispatches to the state department at Washington, which he dictated himself and signed. During the night he fell into a stupor from which he did not rally except at intervals. He was unconscious practically all of Saturday and Saturday night, although every aid known to medical science was applied. There was a slight rally early Sunday morning but the patient soon sunk into unconsciousness from which he did not again rally.

WHITELAW REID.

Ambassador Reid's breakdown dates from his trip to New York last winter to entertain the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, who came from Ottawa to be the ambassador's guests at his town house in New York. He had been a sufferer from asthma for many years and it had been his habit every winter to spend several weeks in the south of France, where he seemed to find relief from the harassing ailment.

Last winter, however, in order to entertain the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and their daughter, the Princess Patricia, he abandoned his trip to France and sailed for New York. His social duties there fatigued him greatly and when he left New York on the return trip last February his nerves were in a serious condition. On the way over he caught a severe cold, the effects of which in his overwrought nervous state he was unable to shake off.

King George has inquired daily as to the ambassador's condition since the fact that he was seriously ill became known. The Hon. John Ward, who was at Dorchester House, telephoned Buckingham palace immediately when the death occurred and within half an hour Sir John Legge, the queen's equerry, called to convey the condolence of the king and queen. Other members of the royal family, including the Dowager Queen Alexandra and the Princess Victoria sent dispatches bearing their condolence to Mrs Reid.

Bulletins announcing the death of the ambassador were posted at all the prominent hotels in London.

The following official statement was issued at Dorchester House by the attending physicians:

"A fortnight ago the ambassador had a return of the asthma from which he had previously suffered severely at considerable intervals. Gradually bronchitis supervened and the asthma paroxysms became very severe, leading to extreme exhaustion. It was hoped that he might rally as no pneumonic symptoms had appeared.

"Although with great difficulty the paroxysms of asthma were gotten under control early Sunday the exhaustion became extreme. Mr. Reid died of pulmonary oedema at ten minutes past 12 o'clock."

The physicians attending Ambassador Reid were Sir Thomas Barlow, Sir William Osler, W. Hale White and Richard Rowlands.

Helen Gould to Wed Railroader.

New York City.—Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould announce the engagement of their sister, Miss Helen Gould, to Finley J. Shepard of St. Louis." This brief announcement made by George J. Gould at Georgian Court, his Lakewood, N. J. home, gave the first intimation of the coming marriage of the eldest daughter of the late J. Gould who, by her numerous acts of philanthropy, has endeared herself to thousands. For more than six months Miss Gould has been engaged to Finley J. Shepard, a railroad official.

New Land Laws Are Needed.

Washington, D. C.—Drastic revision of laws affecting the public domain, and an enlargement of the scope of the department of the interior through increased appropriations by congress, was the tenor of Secretary Walter L. Secretary Fisher held the modification of present laws relating to natural resources and the enactment of new laws affecting public lands to be of the utmost importance.

TRAIN HITS CAR, SIX DIE

FREIGHT BRINGS DEATH AND INJURY TO PASSENGERS.

Twenty Hopper Vehicles Are Wrecked and 10,000 Tons of Coal and Debris Strew Tracks.

VICTIMS OF ACCIDENT.

DEAD.

Laura Leaphart, Ashtabula.
Mrs. Frank C. Bartlett, Ashtabula.
Mrs. W. H. Cook, Ashtabula.
Mrs. George Kitson, Ashtabula.
Mrs. John C. Espy, wife of traffic manager of Cleveland, Painesville & Ashtabula Railway, Willoughby.
David Stowe, Ashtabula.
Mrs. David Stowe.

* * *

Ashtabula, O.—At least six persons were killed and five were injured at the Center-st grade crossing of the Lake Shore and Pennsylvania railroads here when a fast freight train crashed into an Ashtabula rapid transit street car carrying between 15 and 20 people to the Ashtabula Lyceum course entertainment.

The train, northbound on a branch of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern, consisted of 20 heavily loaded coal cars. It plowed through the street car and piled up hundreds of tons of coal on top of the wreckage.

Twenty hopper coal cars were wrecked and 10,000 tons of coal and debris strewed the tracks for half a block. One car crashed through F. H. Dorman's grocery store and spilled its contents therein. The side of Mrs Francis Culver's residence was torn away and 80 feet of Richards Bros.' brick warehouse was demolished. The wreckage of the coal train was piled 40 feet in the air.

Several of the freight cars tipped over and coal was piled high.

It is apparent from the condition of the cars that the engineer applied the brakes in a vain attempt to obviate accident, for the train buckled near the locomotive. The engine itself remained upright and the crew, Engineer D. E. O'Connor and Fireman O. Horchberber, both of Erie, escaped.

As the gates of the crossing were not down, an investigation was begun by the police department.

This disaster is the worst grade crossing accident that ever occurred in Ashtabula.

DISPOSES OF HARD COAL CASE

Supreme Court Dismisses General Charge of Conspiracy Against Roads but Upholds Other Accusations.

Washington, D. C.—The end of the ten-year fight against the anthracite coal trust initiated and conducted by William R. Hearst was reached when the supreme court of the United States handed down a decision, the effect of which will be to destroy the combination which now controls the price of coal. Following is the decision of the supreme court in a nutshell:

Dismissed the general charge of conspiracy against the Reading and other railroads involved in the anthracite coal trust suit, but sustained the other charges of the government, declaring the 65 percent contracts between coal producers and the railroads illegal and ordering the dissolution of the Temple Iron Co. The court refused to dissolve an alleged combination of six railroads, 43 coal operators and a number of subsidiary mining companies which the government charged was in control of all the anthracite deposits in Pennsylvania.

Butter is Robbed of Its Guardians.

Chicago, Ill.—One hundred and twenty million pounds of butter imprisoned in cold storage and hitherto protected from a hungry nation by the price committee of the Elgin butter board, has been robbed of its guardians.

In a wild and stormy session of the Elgin butter board at Elgin, the price quotation committee was abolished. This committee met once a week and arbitrarily fixed a weekly price for butter that served as a basis of quotations throughout the country.

Two Die in Fight With Outlaw.

Los Angeles, Cal.—One deputy sheriff was instantly killed and three members of his posse badly wounded in a desperate battle with James Welch, an outlaw, in a deep ravine in the Red Hill country, nine miles east of Santa Ana, the battle culminating in the death of Welch, who fell with 14 bullets in his body as militiamen, deputy sheriffs and armed citizens rushed his stronghold. The battle followed an attack committed by Welch upon 13-year-old Myrtle Huff, on a ranch near Santa Ana.

HEARST PRODUCES STANDARD NOTES

PUBLISHER, BEFORE THE CLAPP COMMITTEE, SHOWS ADDITIONAL LETTERS.

TELLS WHERE HE GOT THEM

Says He Was Given Photographic Copies of Letters by John Eddy, Who Wrote the First Oil Articles for Magazine.

Washington, D. C.—William Randolph Hearst told the Clapp investigating committee all he knew of the famous Standard Oil letters, first made public by him in his speeches in the campaign of 1908, and afterward published in Hearst's Magazine of this year.

Mr. Hearst produced all the unpublished letters that came within the scope of the senate resolution directing the committee, which is a subcommittee of the committee on privileges and elections to investigate the matter of campaign expenditures. He brought with him the published letters, but these, with one exception, he was not asked to produce.

Although differing with the committee as to its authority to call for letters not included in the resolution, he agreed to produce these later. They will be examined in executive session and if not found pertinent to the inquiry will not be made public.

Mr. Hearst, asked to tell where he got the letters, said that he was given photographic copies of them by John

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

Eddy, who wrote the first Standard Oil articles for Hearst's Magazine. Eddy, he said, brought them to him in Columbus, O., where Mr. Hearst was about to make a speech in advocacy of a new party. Convinced of their authenticity he made use of them in his speech and they were not disputed either by their recipients or John D. Archbold, the author of most of them.

Chairman Clapp, Senator Oliver and Senator Pomerene asked Mr. Hearst many questions with the purpose of learning how the letters originally came from the files of the Standard Oil Co.

Mr. Hearst said that he knew nothing of the letters beyond the fact that copies of them had been placed in his hands by Mr. Eddy.

The questioning on this point occupied most of the hour or more that was occupied in the examination of Mr. Hearst. In fact the senators appeared more eager to learn how the letters had been obtained than to secure any other information Mr. Hearst had to give them.

Incidental to the examination the witness was asked if he knew of any campaign contributions. He replied that he knew only of a contribution of $10,000 or $12,000 he had made to the Independence league campaign fund in 1908.

TELLS OF GREAT CANCER CURE

Doctor Says Fifteen People Have Been Made Whole Within the Past Five Months.

Chicago, Ill.—"Seeing is believing. Fifteen men and women, all more than 60 years old, most of them under sentence of death from physicians and surgeons who had done their utmost, have been cured of cancer within the past five months."

Dr. A. A. Whamond, president of the Robert Burns hospital, thus told what has been accomplished at the hospital by the use of a cancer specific discovered by Dr. Joseph DeStefano of this city.

Not until the subject is presented to the Chicago medical society will the exact nature of the compound be explained. It is taken internally, either in capsule form or from a spoon.

Three Railroads Indicted.

Chicago, Ill.—Three railroads of the New York Central system and one high official, Vice President John Carstensen of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern, were indicted by the federal grand jury in this city for having given rebates amounting $60,000 to the O'Gara Coal Co.

The railroads indicted were: The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Co., The Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway Co., popularly known as the Big Four, the Chicago, Indiana & Southern R. R. Co.

Wilson Warns Panic Makers.

New York City.—President-elect Wilson served flat notice to Wall street at the annual dinner of the Southern Society that he will deal summarily with any man or set of men who undertake to upset the business interests of the country by precipitating a panic.

The president-elect was talking about reports that had reached his ears that his assumption of the office of president would disturb the business of the country and cause a panic.

COL. GEORGE W. GOETHALS

As reward for his services as chief of the isthmian canal, Colonel Goethals will be made a major general, if the bill introduced by Senator Sanders, creating an additional major generalship, becomes a law. President Taft probably will offer the post of governor of the canal zone to Colonel Goethals.

SIX MORE ARE INDICTED

THIRTEEN MUST FACE TRIAL FOR ELECTION CORRUPTION.

Grand Jury, Which Has Been Investigating Vote in Jefferson County, Makes Its Final Report.

Steubenville, O.—[illegible] in addition to the seven indicted recently by the grand jury investigating election corruption in Jefferson county, were indicted Dec 13. The new victims of the probe are:

John A. Mansfield, ex-common pleas judge, accused of exceeding the expense limit allowed by law in his campaign for the Republican nomination for state representative.

W. C. Brown, Republican prosecuting attorney-elect, accused of exceeding the expense limit allowed by law.

James Gilson, accused of giving away a keg of beer in the interests of his brother, John S. Gilson, Republican state representative-elect.

Henry F. Lauber, justice of peace, and A. F. Bernier, Republican member of the board of elections, accused of trying to bribe Alfred Wilkinson, Republican judicial committeeman, to vote for Carl H. Smith, candidate for the nomination for common pleas judge.

Alfred Critten, accused of soliciting a sum of money from E. DeWitt Erskine, candidate for county prosecutor.

In addition, new indictments were returned against John G. Belknap, Republican probate judge-elect, and Richard Gilson, postmaster of Steubenville.

Belknap is accused of exceeding his legal expense limit and also of paying $5 to Edward Connor, a ward worker, and $5 each to divers ward workers, to aid his candidacy.

Gilson is accused of paying $10 to Edward Smith to work for Robert McCleary, candidate for county treasurer.

After submitting this report the grand jury adjourned. The probe will be continued by the grand jury meeting in January.

FOUR HANGED IN ONE DAY

Men Die on Gallows Despite Efforts to Save Their Lives That Are Unprecedented.

Salem, Ore.—Four men were hanged in the penitentiary in this city in one day, despite efforts to save their lives that are unprecedented. The quartette had been under reprieve granted by Gov. Oswald West for varying periods in order that the electorate of the state might have an opportunity to pronounce its verdict whether the men should hang. The verdict was given on Nov. 5, and was in favor of hanging.

Gov. West then turned a deaf ear to the scores of appeals that he save the men's lives. He declared that he would let the hangings go on as he believed that that was the only way to convince the people of the state that legal hangings should be discontinued.

The men executed were Frank Garrison, Noble Faulder, H. F. Roberts and Mike Morgan, all murderers from obscure counties in the state.

Wickersham Attacks Candy Trust.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The "candy trust" of Philadelphia was attacked by Attorney General Wickersham in a civil anti-trust suit filed here against the Philadelphia Jobbing Confectioners' Association.

Members and officers of the association have combined and conspired, it is charged, to coerce candy manufacturers from selling direct to retailers, to consumers or to jobbers other than members of the association. The attorney general asks for injunction against alleged violation of the Sherman law.

To Break Up Elgin Butter Board.

Washington, D. C.—A bill to break up the Elgin Butter Board of Chicago, which controls the price of butter throughout the United States, will be filed by the department of justice within the next few days. The concern, which will be attacked under the Sherman anti-trust law, bears the same relation to the butter trade that the beef trust does to the wholesale and retail meat industry and the results of the monopoly it has made of one of the prime necessities of life have been felt in every home.

PROGRAM ANNOUNCED

GOV.-ELECT COX WILL ASK FOR TWENTY-TWO PROGRESSIVE LAWS.

Big Things Will Be Done in Next Two Years, Says the Chief Executive-To-Be.

Dayton, O.—As governor of Ohio, after January 13, next, James M. Cox will ask the legislature to enact 22 progressive laws this winter.

They comprise the "administration program" for the session.

"But they're not all I want," says Cox. "We're going to do things in Ohio in the next two years. Next October I'll call an extra session of the legislature and then I'll have even a greater program to put through."

Cox laid his legislative cards on the table and sketched briefly the proposed provisions of the different measures he will ask the legislature to enact in the session that begins January 6.

Needs Good Machinery.

"We can't put our progressive program through the way we want it unless we have the right kind of officers and the right kind of committees.

"The state-wide primary bill will provide for the direct nomination of all state, county and municipal officers, direct nomination of U. S. senators and presidential preference primaries. The details I've left to Herbert S. Bigelow, John R. Cassidy and Howard Secrist. It's their job to draft the bill.

"H. H. Shirer, secretary of the state board of charities, is advising with me as to the proper provisions of a mothers' pension bill. It will give to widows with children a sufficient weekly or monthly pension to enable them to keep their children out of public institutions.

To Oust Prosecutors.

"I've asked Atty. Gen. Hogan to help draft a bill for the removal of public officials, including judges and members of the legislature, who don't do their duty. And I've told him to put into it a provision that will enable us to easily oust prosecuting attorneys who don't do their duty in certain matters until the attorney general practically forces them to do it.

"We've got to have real civil service in Ohio if we're to keep pace with other progressive states. I shall recommend a commission of experts to investigate and draft a state-wide civil service bill, to be passed at the special session next fall. This will give them time to study civil service in other states."

TO MANAGE COLUMBUS TEAM.

Columbus, Ohio.—President E. M. Schoenborn, of the Columbus baseball club, announced that William Hinchman, Columbus outfielder for the past two years, has been signed to manage the Columbus club next year. He succeeds William Friel. Hinchman began his baseball career in the New York State league, and has played with Williamsport, Cincinnati and Cleveland.

CIVIL WAR VETERAN DEAD.

Marysville, Ohio.—Major David H. Henderson, aged 85, a veteran of the civil war, who was wounded three times while on the firing line, died at the home of his step-daughter, Mrs. S. S. Flickinger.

CHILD'S BURNS ARE FATAL.

Ironton, O.—Gales Beals, a young daughter of L. R. Beals, was so badly burned while playing about a fire that she died in agony. The child is the second of Mr. and Mrs. Beals to be burned to death.

MAY BECOME A REAL CITY.

Portsmouth, O.—The Lucasville Rural Gazette is leading in a movement to incorporate the village and to boom it as a real live little metropolis.

MAN FELL FORTY FEET.

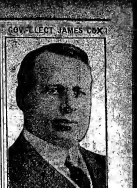
Dayton, Ohio.—Ira Carter, 22, of Bellefontaine, a structural iron worker, fell 40 feet off a new building on the N. C. R. grounds and suffered serious though not fatal injuries.

Springfield, Ohio.—Reuben M. Hoffman, of Chicago, for 26 years general manager of the provision department of Armour & Co., died of pneumonia at the home of his brother. Mr. Hoffman for some years was a member of the Chicago Board of Trade.



GOV.-ELECT JAMES COX

Will Ask Legislature for the Enactment of Twenty-Two Progressive Measures.

CITY HALL IS BURNED

Ancient Structure Destroyed, Together With Valuable Records.

Zanesville, O.—City deeds, engineers' records, minutes of the city council, and maps of the water department, together with all the records of the board of elections and of the board of education, were destroyed when fire gutted the combination city hall and markethouse here. Special registration will be necessary before the next election, as the registration records were consumed. Half a million dollars will not replace the loss to records. The loss to the building is about $35,000, on which there is but $2,500 insurance. The building was erected 80 years ago. A portion of it fell in 1865, killing four people. Afterward it was rebuilt. The first floor was devoted to market purposes, while the city government occupied the second floor.

PANIC IN LIMA HOTEL.

Alarm of Fire Brings Guests From Their Rooms.

Lima, Ohio.—With the thermometer registering ten degrees above zero, scores of guests at the Lima house, the city's most fashionable hotel, rushed from their rooms at an early hour, clad only in night clothes. W. H. Adams, Cleveland, a traveling salesman, had been awakened by smoke filling his room. He ran out in his pajamas and notified the night clerk that the hotel was afire. Men and women in their pajamas and "nighties" gathered in the balcony on the second floor. Several carrying their baggage attempted to leave the building, but were stopped by policemen, who informed them that the blaze was insignificant and that there was no danger. A traveling man, in his hurry to escape from the imagined danger, slipped on the wet marble floor and rolled down to the lobby.

RESIDENCE IS BURNED.

Hamilton, Ohio.—The loss at the fire at the residence of Eldon Purdy, which was destroyed, will reach $4,000, it was stated by John Hoelle, the owner of the property. The fire is believed to have been caused by a defective flue, and gained great headway before it was discovered. Mrs Hoelle is also a heavy loser on a large quantity of household goods which were stored in the front part of the house.

REEVES' HOME IS DESTROYED.

Loveland, Ohio.—A few minutes after fire had been discovered on an upper floor of the palatial country residence of Col. J. E. Reeves, one mile east of Loveland, the structure had been reduced to a smoking heap of ruins. The fire is supposed to have started from a defective flue. Col. Reeves, who was formerly passenger agent of the Big Four railroad, estimates his loss at $5,000.

PHOENIX MILL AGAIN BURNS.

Marietta, O.—The Phoenix mill, the largest flour mill in Southeastern Ohio, three times burned to the ground and more frequently damaged by fires, was destroyed by a fire, which is believed to have been caused by a gas explosion in the engine room. Estimated loss, $50,000. D. H. Torpy, former president of the penitentiary board, was the heaviest loser by the fire.

GARD'S SUCCESSOR IS NAMED.

Hamilton, Ohio.—Probate Judge John B. Connaughton was named as Judge of the Juvenile Court to succeed Judge Warren Gard, who retires January 1. Former Sheriff Luke Brannon will be retained by Judge Connaughton as Probation Officer.

BOY DROWNS; SISTER SAVED.

Portsmouth, Ohio.—Paris Diles, aged 13, was drowned, and only the fact that her sleeve became caught in a cake of ice made possible the rescue of his sister, Tera Diles, 11, at a pond in the east end. The boy had been pushing his sister across the frozen pond on a small wagon when the ice broke. The father, with the aid of neighbors, rescued both, but the boy could not be revived.

St. Marys, Ohio.—John Henry, a farmer residing a few miles west of St. Marys, was struck and fatally injured by a west bound Lake Erie and Western passenger train, while driving over a crossing. He sustained a crushed left arm and severe bruises about the head and body. The wagon was hurled into a ditch and demolished. The horses were uninjured and ran away. A physician attended the injured man and he was removed to his home by his father and one of his employes. He died the following morning.

The STAR of BETHLEHEM

BY WALDEMAR KAEMPFFERT

THE reign of Herod had nearly ended when the Magi arrived in Jerusalem and asked: "Where is he that is born king of the Jews? For we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him."

The news that a true "king of the Jews," a possible rival, was born, and that his birth had been heralded by celestial phenomena, caused Herod much concern. He summoned to him the scribes and learned men. When they were questioned where the king was to be born they answered: "In Bethlehem of Judea; for thus it is written by the prophet, And thou, Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda; for out of thee shall come a governor, that shall rule my people Israel." According to the authorized version it is then stated in the New Testament that "Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, inquired of them diligently what time the star appeared. And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, Go and search diligently for the young child; and when we have found him, bring me word again, that I may come and worship him also. When they had heard the king, they departed; and lo, the star, which they saw in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was. When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy."

That is the whole story of the Star of Bethlehem as it is simply and directly told in the second chapter of the gospel according to St. Matthew.

It was a cloister fancy of the dark ages, handed down through centuries, that led the Christian world to regard the Star of the East as a miraculous luminary, akin to the pillar of fire that guided the children of Israel in the wilderness—a luminary especially created for the sole purpose of leading the Magi to the birthplace of Christ. The modern Christian is more apt to regard the star as a natural phenomenon and to seek a scientific explanation of its sudden appearance, not for the purpose of casting doubt upon the narrative of Matthew, but of giving it astronomical support.

Who were these wise men, these Magi, of whom St. Matthew speaks? They came from the east, they said, and the east, according to the geographical knowledge of Matthew's day, was Chaldea, Persia, and that Arabian desert where the sons of Ishmael roamed. In that east of which they spoke, star-gazing was to some nations a religious observation, to others a mystical traditional rite. The pseudo-science of astrology out of which our modern science of astronomy was slowly evolved was thus encountered. Exegetes of the New Testament narrative hold these Magi to have been astrologers, members of that strange, non-national, privileged priesthood whose office it was to watch the sky each day and each night, to note the position and apparent motion of the sun from dawn to dark, and to predict those changes in planetary positions which, in that day of astrological superstition, were supposed to shape and reveal the destinies of kings and nations. In them science came an early worshipper at the feet of Christ.

To ancient as well as mediaeval astrologers, certain groupings of the stars and planets had a fixed prophetic significance. The planets were named in accordance with their supposed influence. Mercury, always lurking near the sun, furtively gleaming in the morning or evening, was the patron of tricksters, knaves, and thieves. Mars, flaming in red, was the symbol of war, the guardian of heroes and warriors. If the Magi were astrologers who believed in stellar influences the apparition of the Star of Bethlehem must have been an astronomical phenomenon. But no ordinary astronomical phenomenon could have enticed these practiced star-gazers from their temples. We must, therefore, find some celestial event sufficiently extraordinary to warrant a journey from Chaldea or Persia to Bethlehem.

When the Magi arrived in Jerusalem, Herod was within a few weeks of his death. The massacre of the babes of Bethlehem was one of his last cruel deeds. When he inquired diligently what time the star appeared, the reply was evidently such that he felt it necessary to kill all male infants "from two years old and under." It is probable, therefore, that the Magi first saw the star two years before their arrival in Jerusalem. Herod died in B. C. 4. Hence the Star of Bethlehem must have appeared about two years before that date. We must discover, if we can, an exceptional stellar event near B. C. 6 with which it may be identified.

Johann Kepler, in his peculiar genius (for he showed that the births of Enoch, Moses, Cyrus, Caesar, Charlemagne, and Luther were preceded by important astrological events), led the way to calling attention to the astronomical phenomena that preceded the birth of Christ. He pointed out that there must have been a conjunction of the planets Jupiter and Saturn at about the time of Christ's birth, and even made a few preliminary calculations to prove his case. The conjunction occurred in the sign Pisces, from time immemorial identified with the destinies of Israel. A conjunction in that sign always signified the rising of some mighty master of the Jewish race. Such a conjunction of Jupiter and Saturn occurs once in about 800 years. It was, therefore, sufficiently extraordinary in Kepler's eyes to herald the birth of a Messiah.

Not until 1826 was Kepler's suggestion seriously considered by astronomers. In that year Professor Ideler, of Berlin, computed the positions of Jupiter and Saturn and proved that they were actually in conjunction in 7 B. C. His calculations showed that they at no time overlapped to form a single star, but that they were separated by a distance equal to the apparent diameter of the moon. Accordingly Ideler had the temerity to suppose that the wise men saw the two planets as one star, because they were miraculously near-sighted. In justice to Ideler it must be stated that he abandoned his theory when Encke in 1831, repeated the calculations and found that the actual distance between Jupiter and Saturn when nearest each other in B. C. 7, was more than the apparent diameter of the moon.

Apart from the fact that Jupiter and Saturn were never sufficiently near each other to be seen as one body, two planets in conjunction can hardly be called a star. Nor is it likely that experienced Chaldean astrologers would so regard it. Moreover, there were other planetary conjunctions at about the same time. Professor Stockwell has demonstrated that a conjunction of Venus and Mars occurred on May 8th, B. C. 6, about fifty days less than two years before Herod's death. Because the mandate for the slaughter of the infants was issued some time before Herod's death, Professor Stockwell advances the supposition that this conjunction was the Star of Bethlehem. Since conjunctions occurred so frequently, it is difficult to understand why more of them did not call forth Chaldean or Persian deputations.

Because of these fatal objections to any theory which regarded the Star of Bethlehem merely as a conjunction of two planets, the late Prof. R. A. Proctor cast about for other celestial phenomena and finally decided that the wise men might have been guided by a comet. There is much to be said in favor of the supposition. Comets are discovered nowadays at the rate of two or three a year. Not all of them are particularly brilliant, but it is not inconceivable that in Biblical times comets occasionally appeared that were brilliant enough to strike terror into superstitious hearts. Indeed, before Edmund Halley proved that the law of gravitation applied to the comet which bears his name and which has revisited the earth at intervals of seventy-one and one-half to seventy-nine years, comets were regarded as divine messengers, as omens of good or evil, and particularly as harbingers of pestilence and war. To a poetic eastern people who revered the stars as symbols especially set in the heavens for the guidance of men, comets were undoubtedly awesome visitors. The Chaldeans, Persians and Jews were astronomically no more enlightened than the mediaeval Christians, and if at the fall of Constantinople in 1453 all Christendom was alarmed at the appearance of a comet (a comet which we now know to have been Halley's), it is highly probable that the Orient was no less impressed by these sudden visitations. Comprising as it does, a nucleus, a "coma" or envelope surrounding the nucleus and measuring from twenty thousand to one million miles in diameter, and a long tail which streams behind the nucleus for sixty to a hundred million miles or more, a comet is one of the most mysteriously beautiful celestial apparitions that ever meets the eye. But whether or not the Star of Bethlehem really was such an apparition no one can affirm with certainty. An astronomer can merely state that the idea is not untenable and that it is less objectionable than the conjunction hypothesis.

Lastly, the theory has been proposed that the Star of Bethlehem was what is called a "new" star or "nova," a star which suddenly flares up in the heavens and fades away again to its former magnitude after the lapse of weeks or months. Such new stars are not altogether rare. Ten appeared between B. C. 134 and the end of the fifteenth century. Since the fifteenth century no less than sixteen have been recorded. In our own time they are discovered with fair frequency.

Even before the invention of the telescope such new stars were studied by astronomers.

Apart from the astronomical evidence in favor of the theory that the Star of Bethlehem was a nova, poetically, at least, it seems singularly fitting that a matchless orb blazing forth in sudden magnificence should have marked not only the birth of a Messiah whose destiny it was to save mankind by his own suffering and to make possible a new world by purging it of evil, but also the birth of a new sun with embryonic planets wheeling about it in shining clouds of gas and stellar dust.

LIKE HAWAII AS STRONGHOLD

Experts Satisfied That Outpost May Be Relied Upon to Hold Its Own in Conflict.

After five weeks spent in testing the big guns of the various forts and posts on the island of Honolulu, the ordnance experts are pleased, and are declaring among themselves that as an outpost of the nation Hawaii is really beginning to merit the title of "the Gibraltar of the Pacific." The tests were conducted by the most important board of experts ever assembled to consider the military defenses of the islands, a letter to the New York Sun says.

It has been ascertained that the big guns so far in place are not only superbly situated for purposes of defense against all naval attacks, and particularly with reference to the great dry docks and naval station at Pearl harbor, now the greatest of its kind in all the Pacific, but the city of Honolulu. From all sea directions these important points are covered from attack.

But it is found that other guns and mortars must be implanted to secure these places against successful attack from the land side in the doubtful event of an enemy in any considerable numbers being able to effect a landing upon the coast outside the range of the big seven, eight and ten-inch guns, and recommendation for an increase in the number of batteries will be made.

The board of experts was composed of the following officers: Brig. Gen. M. M. Macomb, Lieut. Col. John P. Morrison, Maj. George Blakeson and Maj. W. P. Wooten.

NEW RULES DRAFTED

ARE PATTERNED AFTER THOSE IN USE IN CONGRESS.

Edward W. Hughes Prepares Draft After Studying Rules of Nearly Every Legislature in America.

Columbus.—To expedite business of legislation, to place every member on record as to his position on every piece of proposed legislation, and to curtail the power of the lobbyist and at the same time to force real consideration of measures are the objects sought to be attained in new rules for the Ohio general assembly to be submitted for adoption when the legislature meets in January.

The rules have as their central idea the notion that methods of procedure should look to the death of a bill unless it can demonstrate its merit to the members. In this regard they pattern after the rules of congress.

The drafting was done by Edward W. Hughes, parliamentarian of the present house of representatives, under resolution of the Seventy-ninth general assembly. He has studied the rules of nearly every legislative branch in America, and has sought to select from each the best. Progressive ideas, he says, have been adopted wherever possible, and Hughes stakes his reputation on the proposition that if Gov.-elect James M. Cox expects to finish with the regular session of the legislature in 60 or 90 days, as he has frequently declared, he can do no better than to recommend the proposed provisions for adoption.

Ohio Ranks Among Foremost.

Ohio ranks foremost among the states of the nation in the report of the government bureau of internal revenue, just published. This state is mentioned as being third in the manufacture of cigars weighing more than three pounds per 1,000, with a production of 664,701,917; third in the manufacture of chewing and smoking tobacco with a production of 42,660,256 pounds, fourth in the volume of corporation tax collections, contributing the sum of $1,962,765.88, fifth in the production of fermented liquors, having produced during the fiscal year of 1912 4,742,665 barrels, and sixth in the amount of internal revenue receipts, having contributed $23,968,439.32. The report shows a gratifying decrease in the number of cases of fraud during the year, excepting alone the practice of "moonshining" and "bootlegging," which seems to continue to increase in certain sections. With this exception the industry of manufacturing and selling distilled spirits shows as few cases of attempted fraud as any with which the bureau of internal revenue has to deal. The production of beer during the fiscal year 1912 was 62,176,694 barrels, or a decrease of 1,106,428 barrels as compared with the fiscal year 1911. The number of breweries operated during the year was 1,461, a decrease of 31 breweries, as compared with 1911. There was a phenomenal increase in the tax payment of cigarettes, according to the report, 11,239,536,803 having been tax paid during the last fiscal year, while only 9,254,261,722 were tax paid in 1911.

Opinion On the Judges.

"Until judges of the circuit court of appeals are elected agreeably to the new constitution the judges for the court of appeals will consist of the circuit judges now in office in the various circuits of the state," said Attorney-General Hogan. "In my judgment circuit judges re-elected will be accorded seats in the court of appeals without any trouble," he continued. According to the attorney-general, by the expression in the new constitution, "Judges now in office," is meant not only the circuit judges actually in office, but the circuit judges who were actually elected this year.

Rehearing Is Denied By Court.

The supreme court refused a rehearing of the lake front case from Cleveland as requested by the law firm of Foote, McGowan & Cooke, who represent a number of clients. The case involves title to a tract of highly valuable land on the lake front in Cleveland that has been in dispute for 20 years between the city and the Pennsylvania and New York Central railways. In a decision a few weeks ago the supreme court held for the city and gave title to the land. The motion for a rehearing being denied, the case is ended.

Newspapers Will Fight Proposed Law.

Regulation of newspapers as public utilities, as proposed in a petition which is being circulated under the initiative and referendum, will be fought by the Ohio Select List, an association of daily newspapers. The proposed law would place numerous restrictions upon newspapers, including those put in and then eliminated from the corrupt practices act passed last winter.

Begin Issuing Auto Licenses.

Earl S. Evercoat, of 306 Summit street, Toledo, secured license tag No. 1, when the state automobile department began issuing licenses for 1913. The coveted unlucky number 13 was given to Walter C. Baker of Cleveland, and number 23 to J. W. Bannon, of Portsmouth. Announcement was made that the branch offices of the department at Cleveland and Cincinnati will be discontinued at once, because of an opinion rendered by Attorney General Hogan, who held such branch offices were illegal.

Appointment of Woman Visitors.

Gov. Harmon appointed as members of the board of women visitors to state charitable and penal institutions Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, Columbus; Mrs. Jeannette Opes, New Philadelphia; Mrs. Nathan Rosewater, Cleveland; Mrs. Kate Pangle Strain, London; Miss Blanche Vignos, Canton; Mrs. Mary Proctor Wilson, Lebanon. Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Opes are new appointees; the others were reappointed. Mrs. Wilson is the publisher of the Patriot at Lebanon.

Disbursements of State Grew.

Despite the economies effected in many departments of the state government during the present administration the total disbursements of the state grew during the year 1912. This is shown in the report of State Treasurer D. S. Creamer. In 1911 the total expenditures, which include university common school and sinking fund, raised by a general tax levy, were $12,932,343.97, but in 1912 they were $13,122,180.63. The largest reduction in the year between November 15, 1911, and November 15, 1912, was made in the state institutions. The reduction was from $4,455,139.16 to $3,920,066.44, or $535,073.12. The Ohio National Guard also spent $124,681.38 less than in 1911, while the Board of Agriculture spent $71,965.27 more. The Board of Public Works spent $201,432.13, or $23,511.58 less than the previous year. The State Tax Commission, with all the work that it has done, spent only $60,455.55, and probably is the most economically administered body that is part of the state government. This is less by $2,223 than it spent in 1911. The Commission for the Blind spent $43,153.14, while the expenditure of the Highway Department grew from $277,554 to $554,860. In miscellaneous expenditures are $97,783 for the Kent Normal School, $34,631 for the Woman's Reformatory, and $35,206 for the Perry's Victory Centennial.

Farmers Organize.

For the purpose of securing legislation beneficial to farmers and to secure united action on all questions pertaining to agriculture, representatives from 10 counties in Ohio met and organized the Ohio State Farmers' Association, for which articles of incorporation were issued.

William Rusler of Lima is president of the new organization. He says the association will be conducted in harmony with the granges in the state. The membership is confined to male persons more than 21 years of age. The by-laws stipulate that the organization shall be "strictly non-partisan and non-sectarian."

Other officers of the association elected were: Abraham Mumper, Urbana, first vice president, Fred Gross, Jefferson, second vice president, W. A. McDorman, Selina, treasurer, E. J. Kitchen, Springfield, secretary, U. A. Martin, Kenton, Verne Hagley, Selina, and John Millroy, Huntsville, trustees.

Each county will have its own organization, under directions of the state organization. The association will endeavor to improve the methods of farming, but its main function will be to promote legislation that may be of benefit to those engaged in agriculture. According to the by-laws, the association at all times will be conducted solely in the public interest and not for any private gain. The dues will be $1 a year.

Closed Season on Game.

The Clark County Fish and Game Protective Association, the largest independent organization of its kind in Ohio, will petition the next legislature to pass a law providing a closed season on quail, rabbits, squirrels and doves for two years and the members will ask the state and county granges and the gun clubs over the state to join hands in this movement. This step is taken because of the scarcity of game during the hunting season just closed.

Forty-five Pass Examination.

It is evident that the examinations given to prospective Ohio lawyers by the state bar examining committee are more difficult now than they were a few years ago. In the fall examination only 45 applicants out of 81 were successful. The highest average was won by Joseph B. Coolidge, of Dayton, with 92.1 per cent. He is from the Harvard law school. William S. Paxton, of Cincinnati, Cincinnati law school, is second, with 90.5 per cent.

Blind Tots Have Tree.

Forty tots, all blind, ranging in age from 7 to 8 years, the night before Christmas will cluster around a Christmas tree at the State School for Blind, and will carefully touch and feel their presents. They will then be permitted to feel the Christmas tree, so that they will have a picture in their minds as to just how the tree appears.

Lawyers Want Decisions Reported.

Enactment of law requiring reports of decisions of the new courts of appeals is being urged by lawyers. The supreme court after January must report all decisions setting forth the ground and many lawyers think at least the more important decisions of the appellate courts should be reported.

Many Paroles Are Granted.

A list of the paroles granted to inmates of the state reformatory at Mansfield was announced by the State Board of Administration. There were 139 applicants and of this number 113 were granted and 26 rejected.

Road Wants Assessment Decreased.

A decrease of $16,982,832 in taxes assessment for 1912 was sought by the New York Central Lines at a hearing granted by the state tax commission. The increase in appraisement over that of last year is $24,203,795 and the companies constituting the system contend it is excessive. They contended that, in the case of the Lake Shore Company, the commission had made its calculations with the understanding that 31 per cent of the lines are within Ohio, while in reality 27 per cent only enters the state.

Judges to Start Test Suit.

Common pleas judges who were elected circuit judges last November want to know where they are before resigning their present positions, and therefore will start a suit to clear up the ambiguity in the wording of the constitutional amendment establishing the new court of appeals. To facilitate the bringing of the suit, Secretary of State Graves, at the suggestion of Gov. Harmon, suspended the issuing of official commissions to the circuit judges-elect, after having issued three such commissions.

PULPIT AND SOCIETY

Trend of Church Today Is to Advance in the World the Spirit of the Golden Rule.

THERE is an unmistakable trend in our modern civilization toward neighborliness. Individualism is losing out. A genuine socialism is emerging. Men are getting to be a little more considerate of one another. There is more of a disposition to think in terms of unity and fraternity. The old order is changing. The progress may be slow, but it is real.

True, our friend, the pessimist, rises to remark that the progress toward a real brotherliness is practically imperceptible. He raises questions that seem to indicate that the movement is backward, not forward. Is not the most marked feature of our day its organized selfishness?

But for all the questions of our pessimist friend and despite the prima facie case he may seem to have established, taking a comprehensive view and comparing decade with decade, it is altogether certain that we have made a big advance toward a more social and fraternal organization of society. As indicating the advance made:

Witness the splendid and far-reaching organizations for social service, for relieving oppressive conditions, for helping the least fortunate to make the most for his right to life and liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Witness the consideration that is given to the demands of the great industrial working class, the mighty influence that class is wielding in politics and on legislation, the distinct gain that class has shown in independence, confidence, and self-respect, the growing disposition to give hand-workers equal respect and recognition with brain-workers and the aristocracy of wealth.

Many Things Show Trend.

Witness the great body of legislation in recent years looking to the protection and welfare of the toilers, looking to public health, looking to the rights of women and children, looking to social justice and "the square deal" for every man.

And not to speak of other things, witness the new social emphasis in the work and message of the church. That emphasis is very marked these days in the utterances of the pulpit. The old individualistic gospel that was concerned only about the relations of the soul to God and indifferent to the relations of men in society is giving away. The message is becoming broader. While not putting any less emphasis on the importance of each soul getting right with God, preachers are putting more emphasis on the duty of men to live together in society as brothers, in the spirit of the Golden rule. The pulpit is coming more to concern itself with the external conditions which do so much either to help or hinder spiritual growth.

The social emphasis in religion means that the church is getting back closer to the spirit and method of Jesus. Christ was always working toward a kingdom wherein righteousness and fairness and brotherliness and mutual good-will should bind men together in an ideal social order. And with this end in view the Master was always relieving distress, healing diseases, lightening burdens, sympathising with misfortune, breaking shackles and delivering captives, driving away malignant and tormenting demons, and ministering to the physical welfare in order to promote the spiritual.

Position of the Church.

But this is the question we wish to raise: Has the church lent herself sufficiently to this new social emphasis? A recent writer has asserted that the church always suffers in times of social upheaval because she is so slow to adjust herself to the changing needs of the people, because she is constitutionally conservative, and because she is in such large measure dependent on certain rather comfortable and well-favored classes of society. For reasons like these, it is asserted, there has come to be a distinct breach between the church and the working people.

How much of truth is there in these assertions we leave our readers to judge for themselves. We want to assert our belief that the church cannot afford to neglect the social message that she must concern herself with the social and economic and industrial conditions. The gospel of brotherliness must be persistently preached. And all the mighty influence of the church must be directed toward breaking down organized selfishness and vested privilege and every unsocial form of business and political and industrial organization.—The United Presbyterian.

Betterment.

The business of the physician and the real hospital conducted on scientific lines is to remove clouds, dissipate superstition and bring health and happiness to the whole community.—Rev. M. A. Matthews, Presbyterian, Seattle.

Joy in Serving.

It is said to be common for guides of travelers among the mountains of the east, as they wend their way between the rocks or through narrow and intricate paths, to place every here and there a stone on a conspicuous bit of rock, or two stones one upon another. At the same time, they are heard uttering words which are of thanksgiving—thanks to God for help so far and prayer for safe return. We are just at such a memory-spot of the year, as we observe a general Thanksgiving Day. And it will be accompanied by many sincere, new and good resolutions to cultivate a right spirit. But how many will make these vows practical? David had the real idea of thanksgiving. "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me?"

Hope always strengthens to the performance of duty, gives courage, and clears the judgment.—G. Macdonald.

Those who seem to escape from discipline are not to be envied; they have farther to go.—A. C. Benson.

WILLIAM WORRIES 'EM

Gracious! how the downeast captains of finance and their kept newspapers are worrying about Bryan!

William J. will be an important factor in the democratic conduct of affairs. Yes, sir, it's all right, because we high financiers who've cussed and kicked him all we knew how can't help it. William would look well as secretary of state. Yes, sir, it's agreeable. He's a bit rusty as to dignity and poise, perhaps, but he would be busy elsewhere than in the business of us concentrators of wealth. But what we goldbugs everlastingly fear is that William will carry out his idea of placing the issuing of notes entirely in the hands of the government. We believe he wishes to have greenbacks constitute the sole paper currency of the country, and our panics wouldn't pay with William running the presses printing out money for the oppressed whom we wanted to squeeze or gobble up.

No, sir! William shouldn't be turned in to graze in the field of finance. Isn't everything lovely now? Aren't we bankers turning out beautiful notes. Isn't the wealth being concentrated so that we can swing it this way or that right easily? Sure, William's all right in his place. Fine fellow, every way. But his place isn't where he can make the government do things. William's no hand to trust with paternalism and socialism and red-hot things like that. We money trust fellows love our country because it's ours. So, please put William in some job where he will not disturb us and our country.—Cleveland Press.

NOT A GAMBLING-PLACE?

The New York Stock Exchange is a market for securities, an institution for bringing buyers and sellers together and adjusting prices to the values of great corporate properties.

As such it buys and sells the whole capital stock of many concerns from eight to ten times a year. It averages an exchange of the whole available Reading Railroad stock over thirty times a year, with only about 8 per cent of the stock showing any transfer on the books of the company.

But perish the notion that this shows any manipulation of prices regardless of values, or any gambling on fluctuations caused by manipulation! Everybody knows how the whole hay crop of the country has to be sold thirty times over before prices are properly adjusted, and the potato crop as many times before it is economically fit for the consumer.—N. Y. World.

The Cost of Living

(Chicago Public)

Bulletins Nos. 105 and 106 of the Bureau of Labor, issued in August 1912, have attracted a good deal of attention.

This is not surprising as they deal with an interesting subject, The Cost of Living. The Bureau places before us in statistical form the now familiar fact that the necessaries of life are fast becoming luxuries.

Taking as a basis average prices from 1890-1899, it is found that in June, 1912, the cost of food for an average workingman's family had increased from 47 per cent to 65 per cent, according to the section of the country considered. This may be stated as a summary of the results of the investigation. The methods of calculation are explained in the bulletins.

Nearly everything has gone up. Irish potatoes lead the list with an advance of 111 per cent, while sugar trails along in the rear with only 8½ per cent. Prices for 1912 show advances over those of 1911, ranging from 5.5 per cent in January to 14.2 per cent in May.

Dealers have been asked to comment on the situation.

As to consequences, some are explicit. Out of 36 quoted, 3 say they will go out of business; 3 more that they are making no profit; 1 that he [illegible] ...n to the retail business.

As to causes, there are some specific reasons given.

Bread is going up on account of a rise in flour. Nominally there is no advance in bread. The five-cent loaf still sells for five cents and the ten-cent loaf for ten cents, only there is less bread in the loaves. The Bureau finds that "the small plant using, in the main, hand process is being rapidly replaced by the large modern bakery using machine methods of production." And the advantage of the economy goes to—somebody.

Milk was high, according to one dealer, owing to a short supply, this being due to the high price of feed.

A New England dealer reports that the high price of meat is attributed to the high price of corn. So it is. You have heard the explanation yourself.

It costs too much to raise cattle, therefore, the supply is short. But if sirloin steak has advanced 59 per cent and rib roast 63 per cent and round steak 84 per cent, how do you account for that? Is there a greater shortage in the cattle to which we are indebted for sirloin steak than to the useful animals which supply us with round steak? Are they actually sending to market cattle unprovided with round steaks? Or what?

The usual explanation of the retailer is that he is charging more because he has to pay more. This is excellent as far as it goes but it is not entirely satisfactory.

However, there are able minds not engaged in the retail trade, struggling with this problem.

A Protectionist orator in New York the other day proved triumphantly that the tariff is not responsible for the price of eggs, but that is as far as he got.

The overproduction of gold has been offered as a reason for the present high prices, but why the accursed yellow metal should send milk up 32 per cent and pork chops up 86 per cent is not apparent on its face.

Some authorities think the extravagance of the masses is responsible for present conditions. For example their preference for fine cuts of meat. But, as we have seen, round steak is more than holding its own with sirloin.

There are people who think the rise in prices is the result of the rise in money wages. But before accepting this theory we should have to know which rose first and whether the rise in wages is equal to the whole or to what part of the rise in prices.

If the Reverend Mr. Malthus is still interested in such things he may be looking down at these tables and saying, What? Smoked bacon gone up 96 per cent? Evidently population is pressing on subsistence. These people need a war. If they killed off half the population the rest might be able to eat potatoes.

If we may assume for a moment that the high prices are brought about by trusts or combinations, we encounter the painful fact that some of the monopolists are in hard luck.

Why should granulated sugar have gone up only 8½ per cent and pork chops 86 per cent? Have not the trusts equal rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of the consumer's money?

It recalls that ancient story of the small boy to whom was shown the picture of Daniel in the lion's den. He was deeply moved. He was afraid that the poor little lion in the corner wouldn't get any of Daniel.

Will the consumer last long enough to go around?

—Wm. E. McKenna.

Br'er Fox Again

"A fox which was hard pressed by the Essex Union Hounds entered a house in High street, Billericay, and bolted upstairs into a bedroom. When found," says Punch, "he pretended to be a wolf rehearsing 'Red Riding Hood' for a cinematograph show, but his tale was cut short."

Ends Hunt For Rich Girl

Often the hunt for a rich wife ends when the man meets a woman that uses Electric Bitters. Her strong nerves tell in a bright brain and even temper. Her peach-bloom complexion and ruby lips result from her pure blood; her bright eyes from restful sleep; her elastic step from firm, free muscles, all telling of the health and strength Electric Bitters give a woman, and the freedom from indigestion, backache, headache, fainting and dizzy spells they promote. Everywhere they are woman's favorite remedy. If weak or ailing try them. 50c at Gehring's Pharmacy.

Remonstrance.

The stray bits of conversation one cannot help overhearing in public places sometimes are deliciously funny.

A conductor said, in tones of great severity, to a passenger who was making considerable disturbance on the car:

"Here, here, sir! Remember you are on a public vehicle and you must behave as such."

Cause of Suffering.

Consider how much more you often suffer from anger and grief than from those things by which you are angered or grieved.

$100 REWARD, $100

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

ORDINANCE No. 880

An Ordinance to Provide for the Issue of Bonds of the City of Painesville in the sum of Five Thousand (5000) Dollars to Purchase Additional Equipment for and to Extend the Lines of the Electric Light Department.

Be it ordained by the Council of the City of Painesville, State of Ohio, two-thirds of the members elected thereto concurring:

Section 1. That it is deemed necessary by the Council of the City of Painesville, State of Ohio to issue and sell the bonds of said City in the sum of Five Thousand (5000) Dollars, for the purpose of purchasing additional equipment for and of extending the lines of the Electric Light Department of said City.

Section 2. That under the authority of Section 3939 of the General Code of the State of Ohio, authorizing the issue of bonds by municipal corporations, bonds of the city of Painesville, State of Ohio, be issued in the sum of Five Thousand (5000) Dollars for the purpose of purchasing additional equipment for and extending the lines of the Electric Light Department of said City.

Section 3. That, whereas by Ordinance No. 878 duly passed April 29th, 1912, said City authorized the issue of bonds numbers 589, 590 and 591 in the sum of Five Hundred (500) Dollars each, and

Whereas said bonds were not issued, now therefore,

Said bonds as provided for in this ordinance shall be designated "Electric Light and Extension Bonds," shall be of the denomination of Five Hundred (500) Dollars each, shall be numbered 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597 and 598, shall be dated October 1, 1912 and shall mature as follows: Nos. 589 and 590 on October 1, 1919; Nos. 591 and 592 on October 1, 1920; Nos. 593 and 594 on October 1, 1921; Nos. 595 and 596 on October 1, 1922, and Nos. 597 and 598 on October 1, 1923. Section 4. Said bonds shall express upon their face the purpose for which they were issued and a citation of the law and the ordinance by which they were authorized. They shall be prepared, issued and delivered under the direction of the Finance Committee of the Council and the City Auditor. They shall be signed by the Mayor of said City and by the City Auditor and shall be sealed with the corporate seal of said City. The interest coupons attached to said bonds shall be executed by the City Auditor with his signature thereto or he shall have his signature printed or lithographed thereon. Said bonds shall be recorded in the office of the Trustees of the Sinking Fund in the name of the purchaser and shall bear interest as aforesaid.

Section 5. Said bonds shall first be offered at par and accrued interest to the Trustees of the Sinking Fund in their official capacity. If the Sinking Fund Trustees refuse to take any or all of said bonds at par and interest, then said bonds not so taken shall be offered at par and accrued interest to the Board of Commissioners of the Sinking Fund of the City School District. If said Board of Commissioners also refuse to take any or all said bonds at par and interest, then said bonds not so taken shall be advertised for public sale and sold in the manner provided by law, but not for less than their par value and accrued interest.

Section 6. That the proceeds from the sale of said bonds, except the premiums and the accrued interest thereon, shall be placed in the City Treasury to the credit of the Electric Light Fund and shall be disbursed upon proper vouchers to pay for certain equipment and to extend the lines of the Electric Light Department and for no other purpose.

Section 7. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and legal publication.

All Painesville Coughing

A great number of our city's men, women and children have colds and coughs today. The air seems to be fairly laden with these throat and lung troubles. There is great danger of contracting pneumonia or consumption from them. Nearly every case has its beginning in a cold or cough, and many people die as a result. Beware!

A sudden chill, stupefying fever, sore throat, hoarseness, running nose, racking cough, rattling and wheezing in chest, painful breathing, signify that your cold borders on pneumonia.

There are many remedies offered for colds, but there is one certain, reliable article that we know of—DR. BULL'S COUGH SYRUP. It is best for soothing and subduing the inflamed, sore, bronchial tubes and lungs. It wards off pneumonia. It checks cough at once. Cuts a cold short. Don't wait to see if your cold or cough wears away of itself, as pneumonia may come over night.

Test it first by sending a postal for a free sample. Address A. C. MEYER & CO., Baltimore, Md. But, to have no delay, get a regular bottle of the remedy; price, 25 cents, from your druggist today. This is the best advice we can give to avoid pneumonia. (ADV.)

MENTOR

The weather today is mild and yet rather cloudy and damp as though it might easily rain. The ground is bare of snow and many of our people are wishing it might remain bare all winter, although the farmers declare it is better for fruit and grain to have snow to cover them up and keep them warm. Last Thursday the first blizzard of the season was here all day and part of Friday, the air full of blinding snow; a strong wind that prevented any accumulation of heat in the houses, and mercury way down to ten above zero, so that really it was as cold as twenty below would have been without any wind. Some persons who are keeping track of weather in Cleveland, declare it was the coldest twelfth of December in forty-six years! At any rate, it was cold enough to satisfy Mentor people so far as we have heard.

Mrs. B. F. Upham is spending some little time with friends in Erie, just now.

The Men's Bible Class of the Methodist church held their first supper and social time on last Wednesday evening, there being about thirty present, and the supper being served by Mrs. Morley's "Welcome" class of ladies. A very delightful evening was the result, and the class proposes continuing them through the winter.

Mrs. Harry King and daughter, Eleanor, spent several days last week down in Hudson with Mrs. William Ellsworth and other relatives.

The second of the entertainments offered by the Mentor committee is expected to come off this week Saturday evening in the Village Hall, when Mr. Chambers, quite a noted impersonator, will be here. Those who have not bought season tickets can get tickets for the evening for thirty cents, we understand.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Rexford and children were guests over Sunday of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Smith. Mr. Rexford is at the head of the lace department in the Higbee store in Cleveland and is the only brother of Mrs. Smith.

Miss Emily Haskell has been in the city for several days, having been called there by the illness of her niece, Miss Caddie Haskell.

The dry goods and fancy store of E. S. Carleton has a fine line of goods this holiday season with some things like ivory clocks for instance that have never been brought into the village before. Really, it does seem a sensible thing to buy what one wants right at home whenever one can find the right thing, exactly.

Mrs. Albert Warren of Concord has been a recent guest of her husband's relatives here, namely Mrs. Anna Warren Shumaker, Mrs. Chas. Johnson and Mr. and Mrs. Ben Warren.

The Mentor cousins of Mrs. William Mills, nee Lizzie Corning, were very glad to receive word from her a few days ago, to the effect that her husband is improving in health, and that they are in Germantown, Pa., probably for the winter. The many old friends of Mrs. Mills will be delighted to see them in Mentor another summer.

Mrs. Frank Case went down to Hudson on Wednesday and was intending to go on to Washington, D. C. to remain until after the holidays.

On account of the blizzard on hand last Thursday, the Missionary meeting at the residence of Mrs. Cassius Harris was postponed until this week Thursday, and the program will still be in the hands of Mrs. Morley.

The Methodist Sunday school is to have its White Gift program on Sunday morning when only the parents of the scholars are invited, and the regular Christmas Eve program on Monday evening, to which everybody and all his friends are invited. On Sabbath evening the choir are to give their Christmas cantata to which all are invited, and from the amount of study and practice they have been putting into it we judge it will be good.

The Disciple Sunday school is to have a Christmas tree, also a Santa Claus, on Tuesday evening, Christmas Eve, and an unusually good program of fine music is being prepared, so that the entertainment is sure to be nice.

Miss Anna Norton entertained her school friend, Miss Hazel Jackson, of the County Seat, on Saturday last.

The village library is again open for the drawing of books, the new "Fuller & Warne" furnace having been put in by Mr. George Marsh, on short notice, the old furnace having been literally burned out during the short time in which it has done service in the library building.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace Andrews together with their children, are expected to arrive at their country home here "Primrose Hill", coming on from New York City in order to spend the Christmas vacation at the only home which the Andrews children really think worthy to be called home. They are expected to arrive sometime today or tomorrow, and to remain over the New Year's Day.

Mr. Williams, an Anti-Saloon League man, occupied the Methodist pulpit on Sunday morning, and gave an unusually fine talk, to a much better audience than usual as some folks stay away when it has been announced that a "League" man is to hold forth. And this, not because the sentiment of Mentor folks is against temperance, not at all, but more because the fight seems such a hopeless one, than for any other reason. Mr. Williams gave the audience plainly to understand that it was this giving way to discouragement, more than anything else, that gave the recent victories to the saloon folks.

The Mentor high school is to close this term by a little drama to be given in the village hall on Friday afternoon of this week, to witness which, the public is generally invited. The drama is called "The Christmas of the Jones Family," and promises being worth hearing.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Hagenberger have just returned from a trip to Chicago, and we understand are intending to go to California soon after the Holidays, for the remainder of the winter.

Many of our people are going to the city to shop these days, though it has been declared that more "Christmas Stuff" is being bought at home than ever before in the history of the village, partly because there is a better variety from which to choose.

A little Christmas magazine gotten out by Mr. Benj. Moseley of Willoughby, is the most artistic thing of its kind that we have ever seen, and Mr. Moseley really has the goods all ready to show to customers, never urging anybody to buy, but his prices are tempting, really.

We were told afterwards, that the gentleman named Mr. H. H. Hopkins who died in Eustis, Florida recently at the home of our Mr. M. V. Hopkins, and whose body was brought north and buried in Mentor, was not a brother of Mr. Martin Hopkins as we had supposed (that brother of his having died about a year ago), and we didn't know. The mistake doesn't matter particularly, for we are just as sorry for those who mourn as though it was for some of our own Mentor folks.

These are the days when good resolutions are getting ready to open and bear fruit in the shape of resolves. Can we not begin to look more kindly upon the peculiarities of others and love them more—just a very little more?

Man Coughs and Breaks Ribs

After a frightful coughing spell a man in Neenah, Wis., felt terrible pains in his side and his doctor found two ribs had been broken. What agony Dr. King's New Discovery would have saved him. A few teaspoonful ends a late cough, while persistent use routs obstinate coughs, expels stubborn colds or heals weak, sore lungs. "I feel sure its a Godsend to humanity," writes Mrs. Effie Morton, Columbia, Mo., "for I believe I would have consumption today, if I had not used this great remedy." Its guaranteed to satisfy, and you can get a free trial bottle or 50-cent or $1.00 size at Gehring's Pharmacy.

SYNOPSIS.

Harding Kent calls on Louise Farrish to propose marriage and finds the house in great excitement over the attempted suicide of her sister Katharine. Kent starts an investigation and finds that Hugh Crandall, suitor for Katharine, who has been forbidden the house by General Farrish, had talked with Katharine over the telephone just before she shot herself. A torn piece of yellow paper is found, at sight of which General Farrish is stricken with paralysis. Kent discovers that Crandall has left town hurriedly. Andrew Elser, an aged banker, commits suicide about the same time as Katharine attempted her life. A yellow envelope is found in Elser's room. Post Office Inspector Davis, Kent's friend, takes up the case. Kent is convinced that Crandall is at the bottom of the mystery. Katharine's strange outcry puzzles the detectives. Kent and Davis search Crandall's room and find an address, Lock Box 17, Ardway, N. J. Kent goes to Ardway to investigate and becomes suspicious of a "Henry Cook." A woman commits suicide at the Ardway Hotel. A yellow letter also figures in this case. Kent calls Louise on the long distance telephone and finds that she had just been called by Crandall from the same booth. "Cook" disappears. The Ardway postmaster is missing. Inspector Davis arrives at Ardway and takes up investigation. He discovers that the dead woman is Sarah Backet of Bridgeport. Louise telephones Kent imploring him to drop the investigation. Kent returns to New York to get an explanation from Louise. He finds the body of a woman in Central Park and more yellow letters. He sees Crandall, whom he recognizes as "Cook," enter the Farrish home. Louise again implores Kent to drop the investigation and refuses to give any explanation. Later Kent sees Crandall and Louise in an automobile. Kent returns to Ardway. Davis announces that he has planned to arrest the missing postmaster and also the master-criminal. While seeking the criminals Kent comes across Louise and Crandall. Pursued by Davis the postmaster jumps off a precipice and is killed. Aleck Young, the master criminal, is found in a hut in a morphine stupor. Louise tells Kent that she and Crandall had come to get papers from Young which gave him a strange hold over General Farrish. It is shown that Crandall's only interest in the case was to help Katharine recover her father's papers.

CHAPTER XIV.—(Continued.)

"But are you sure Young wrote all the yellow letters?"

"Certainly," said the inspector, getting up from the bench and entering the cottage.

When he returned a few minutes later he had in his hand a bundle of yellow paper and envelopes. As I examined them I saw that they were of exactly the color and texture of all the fragments of yellow letters that I had seen.

"Where did you find them?" I asked.

"In a cupboard over there by the fireplace. I don't know whether you noticed it or not, but over there, too, is the typewriter on which Young wrote the letters that he gave Rouser to mail for him."

"What makes you think Rouser mailed them?"

"There are six different things that prove Rouser's connection with Young's fiendish plots. The stamps were put on by a left-handed man and Rouser was left handed. The answers were received in the Ardway post office, where Rouser was postmaster. Lock Box 17, to which they were addressed, was not entered in the list of box-holders. You yourself found a large sum of money in the post office cash drawer that had no business being there. Rouser himself mysteriously disappeared when he found that some one was on the trail of the yellow letters. And lastly, Rouser and Young for weeks have been together most of the time."

"How did you learn that?"

"Young, it seems," the inspector continued, "is well known in Ardway, his boyhood having been spent in the town. His father was a well-to-do lawyer who became addicted to drugs. His mother died in the state asylum for the insane. The constable, Dodds, has known him for many years. He went to Harvard and there was a classmate for a while of Crandall. He has been going from bad to worse, each time he returned to Ardway on his periodic visits seeming to be more and more addicted to morphine. His inheritance was spent long ago and it has been a mystery to every one where he got considerable sums that he has had at times. With all his faults, he has much magnetism and a plausible tongue and makes friends readily. So far as I can discover, after he had concocted his plot against General Farrish he had some difficulty in obtaining satisfaction and tried to enlist the aid of Crandall. Crandall went at once to General Farrish and was ordered out of the house. Crandall, despite his treatment by the general, was determined to solve the mystery, and for months kept track of Young, trying to worm out the secret and render him powerless. At times he gave Young small sums and for a while, as I have said, had him in his rooms. One day Young disappeared, taking with him some jewelry of Crandall's and it was only a few days ago that Crandall succeeded in finding him here in Ardway. Young, having failed to blackmail General Farrish, tried to open up negotiations for the sale of his documents through Crandall. Crandall, of course, could not communicate with General Farrish, so he called Katharine on the telephone and made an appointment with her. Evidently he explained the whole affair to her, and when the negotiations failed—it was more than she could bear."

"That all seems logical," I said, "but I fail to see yet what connection there is between General Farrish and old Andrew Elser. Nor do I see the connection between the suicide of the old woman in the hotel at Ardway and the suicide of the young woman in the park lake, yet in each of these cases there were yellow letters."

"I do not see it myself, yet," said Davis frankly, "and yet I know it exists. I know that the hellish idea that drove them all to death was planned by that distorted brain inside the cottage there."

He was silent for several minutes as he gazed at the rising sun, seemingly absorbed in the glorious spectacle.

"I'll find out!" he said explosively. "I'll make him tell."

"What are you going to do?" I asked. "How will you make him?"

For answer he took from the pocket of his coat two sets of thin steel cuffs, one for the arms and the other for the ankles, and stepped within the cottage. I followed wonderingly and watched him as he turned Young over on his face and, bringing his hands together behind him, snapped on the cuffs. He shackled his feet, too, and then picking up a stout rope, passed it between the two sets of shackles and around a beam in the side of the cottage wall, leaving enough slack to permit the shackled man a small amount of liberty. During the whole operation Young hung limp and apparently lifeless, still in the drug stupor, but as Davis finished his work he began to talk incoherently.

"The shaking up I gave him in fastening him up," said Davis, "will bring him to. He will wake up in a few minutes and then I'll find out everything I want to know. I'll make him tell."

"What are you going to do," I gasped, "torture him?"

"No," said the inspector grimly as he dragged a stool over near the couch and placed on it a hypodermic syringe he had found in the cabin, and with it a morphine preparation.

He gaged the distance with his eye, and moved the stool so that while it would be in plain sight of the shackled man when he awoke, it would be utterly impossible for him to reach it.

"No," he said, "I'm not going to torture him. His drug racked nerves will do it for me."

CHAPTER XV.

The Torture.

Hell is a place of unsatisfied desires, and in its lowest depths are those, who, writhing in the agony of their decaying nerves, shriek for their beloved morphine and shriek in vain.

Many times in my life I have seen the souls of men, and women, too, put to hard and bitter tests.

Once I saw a motorman whose car had crushed a lovely child. Around him pressed a howling, angry mob, led by the baby's father, who would have had his life. With bold daring he stood on his platform as on a throne, with his controller bar for his only weapon, and defied them all. Yet, even as he stood there outwardly so bold, I saw in his eyes a misery as great as man could bear and live. For days and months I doubt not that his nightly dreams brought him constant horror pictures of the child he had killed.

Once, too, I had to be the bearer of the news when a workman's misstep on a frame of steel sent him plunging down eighteen stories to death. In the foul tenement where I told my news I saw a tired, gaunt woman walk the floor and scream and moan, three frightened little children clinging to her skirts.

Often, too, in my practice in the courts, I have seen men in dreadful misery—a ruffian bold and defiant despite the blood-guilt on his soul, face all the world courageously until the jury's foreman said the word that brought the death-chair's horror to his heart and crumpled him weeping to the floor.

Yet all the concepts that my brain had formed of the utmost in pain and shame and misery faded into insignificance before the things I saw in that rude cottage in the Jersey hills where for two long days Davis and myself kept watch on the fettered master criminal—waiting, waiting, waiting till his drug-tortured nerves should make him tell us the secret of his yellow letters.

Shackled hand and foot though he had found himself when he came out of his stupor, his self-control was at first wonderful. For a few minutes after Davis had fastened his bonds he lay there tossing and twitching, then suddenly opened his eyes—piercing, devilish, uncanny black eyes they were—and tried to sit up.

The rope through the manacles behind him stopped him short and threw him back on his couch. At the same time he caught sight of Davis sitting near the foot of his couch. In silence they eyed each other, neither of them saying a word. Stealthily Young shifted, first his hands and then his feet as if to ascertain the extent of his bonds. Finding himself securely fastened he let his eyes rove around the room and discovered me. He studied my face sharply, as if to read my mission, but quickly turned his gaze to Davis again, as if recognizing in him his master captor.

Then he laughed—a hideous, chilling, defiant laugh, that ended in an unhealthy gurgle in his throat.

"Well?" he asked inquiringly.

I looked for Davis to seize on this propitious moment, when Young, just aroused from drug slumber, would be weak and nervous, to ply him with questions about the things we wished to know, but the inspector was too much a master of his craft for that. As if he had not heard his prisoner's question, he sat there staring fixedly at the man before him.

One minute passed, two minutes—three, and still Davis sat silent and unanswering. The cumulative force of prolonged silence began to grow on my nerves. This waiting, waiting, was torture. If only one of them would speak. To Young it must have been far worse.

Still they kept at it, Davis staring straight into Young's eyes and Young trying to stare back. For a few minutes he succeeded, and then his eyes shifted and fell. With a master effort of his will he brought them back to Davis and held them steady. There the two of them sat as in a duel, the prisoner's baleful eyes shooting forth venom, hate, murder, while in the other's steady glance was pictured relentless justice.

Of course, there could be but one end to it. Powerful as was the will in the drug-racked body, the twitching of the muscles, the involuntary drawing up of the limbs and arms as far as the bonds would permit, and most of all the clasping and unclasping of the fingers told what torture the silence was bringing to Young.

He burst forth at last in a wild flow of profanity, cursing Davis, cursing me, cursing everything, cursing God, and still Davis sat there as rigid and as silent as the superior of a Trappist monastery doing penance. At times the prisoner's voice was raised to a hideous shriek, at times it sank to a pitiful sob, and all the while he tugged and strained at his bonds, twisting, turning, reaching, trying always to find some position in which he could gain possession of the morphine that lay on the chair just beyond his reach.

At last—it must have been an hour later—physical exhaustion conquered him and he lay back, after one last frantic struggle, weak and panting, unresisting.

The inspector arose, and, walking over to the couch, stood there looking down at him.

"Aleck Young," he said evenly, "your whole game is up. I know all about General Farrish and Andrew Elser and the woman from Bridgeport. I know about Dora Hastings, who committed suicide in the park lake yesterday, and about Henry Eharle, who sent you the five thousand. I know everything that your unfortunate aide, Rouser, knew, and now I want you to surrender all the letters and papers in your possession."

"You will never get them," sneered Young, as I sat there marveling at the inspector's revelations. It was news to me that he knew the name of the Central Park suicide, and while I myself had found the five thousand dollars, I had had not the slightest intimation that Davis knew from whom it had come.

"Either I get these letters," said Davis evenly, "or you get no more morphine."

Young laughed in his face.

"You haven't the slightest evidence against me for anything. Without letters or documents you can prove nothing. You have no right to keep me bound up here. I shall get free and shall make you pay for this. I don't care what Rouser has told you, you'll get nothing out of me and you have proof of nothing."

"Very well," said the inspector, "no letters, no morphine."

Turning away from the couch, he spoke to me in a tone as indifferent as if we had been camping together.

"Come on, Kent, let's see what we can dig up for breakfast."

We found the cottage well supplied with provisions as if it had been the intention of the conspirators to make it their headquarters for some time. In a very few minutes Davis had some bacon fried and toast and coffee made, which he spread in the little lean-to that was used as a kitchen.

"So you mean to starve him, too?" I asked in an undertone, pointing to the couch.

"It won't be necessary," said Davis. "Take something in to him if you like. You'll find that the only appetite he'll have will be for morphine."

Nevertheless, I took a cup of coffee and some toast in to the prisoner. A volley of oaths was my only reward, so I returned and sat with Davis while he ate. I myself had no appetite, but the events of the night did not seem in the least to have affected his. I drank only part of a cup of coffee, though he urged me to eat something.

"It is apt to be a long siege," he said, "and you must keep your strength. Our prisoner is a man of considerable will power and is not going to confess readily. If you will keep guard on him for a couple of hours I am going to sleep."

"Of course, I will."

"Under no circumstances," said Davis, as he flung himself down on the floor of the lean-to, "loosen any of his bonds, and pay no attention to his pleas for mercy. He has a winning way about him that is dangerous."

"You need not fear," I replied. "Remember the agony he has caused to the woman I love."

"And to many others," said Davis.

"Speaking of that," said I, "I wish you would tell me before you go asleep how you learned where the five thousand came from."

"Rouser told me."

"I was not aware that you had any opportunity to talk with him."

"I didn't," said the inspector. "I just used my eyes in the postoffice."

I thought I had used mine pretty well in the post office, but certainly I had seen nothing that would lead me to identify the person who had sent the five thousand dollars I had found in the cash drawer.

"Don't talk in riddles!" I exclaimed rather petulantly. "What did you find in the post office?"

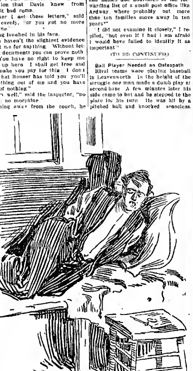
Davis grinned.

I nodded assent.

"Did it not strike you as peculiar that there should be over two thousand names and addresses in the forwarding list of a small post office like Ardway, where probably not more than ten families move away in ten years?"

"I did not examine it closely," I replied, "but even if I had I am afraid I would have failed to identify it as important."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)



He Studied My Face Sharply as if to Read My Mission.

Ball Player Needed an Osteopath.

Rival teams were playing baseball in Leavenworth. In the height of the struggle one man made a dumb play at second base. A few minutes later his side came to bat and he stepped to the plate for his turn. He was hit by a pitched ball and knocked senseless. His teammates dashed water on him, stood him up and laid him down again, the crowd offering all kinds of advice meanwhile. Finally the captain asked for a doctor. One of the rival team started away, and then paused to ask: "Say, you want an osteopath, don't you?" "No, why?" "Well, he got hit on the head, didn't he?"

"Gallery God" Spoiled It

Why Maurice Barrymore Canceled Dislike for His "Heart of Maryland" Part.

All the good stories which the late Maurice Barrymore, father of Ethel, Lionel and John Barrymore, told on himself never have been published and probably never will be. Barrymore was in Kansas City just prior to his final collapse and here is a story he told:

Barrymore was Mrs. Leslie Carter's leading support when that celebrated actress appeared in Belasco's production of "The Heart of Maryland." In the big third act Barrymore, the hero, was in the hands of the designing villain, who had caught him off guard. Two rookies bound Barrymore's hands and the villain, left alone with his prey, taunted the hero. It was Barrymore's "business" to squirm and to wail.

"Oh, if my hands were free," he would repeat several times, as he tried vainly to break the rope which held him fast. The villain would approach and snap his fingers right under Barrymore's nose.

"Loosen my hands, you devil!" Barrymore would exclaim.

One night at this great and exciting moment in the scene Barrymore had just finished his dare to the villain to loosen his hands when the traditional gallery god yelled out in sharp, clear voice:

"Why don't you kick him in the shins, Barry; your feet ain't tied."

Barrymore cursed the part from that moment until his dying day.

Grapefruit With Figs.

Have some fine figs and cut them into small pieces; put them in a glass jar and cover with brandy. Let them stand in this for 24 hours. Cut the grapefruit in halves; scoop out the little cavity in the middle of each half, as usual, fill this with figs and let the grapefruit stand on ice three or four hours before serving.

Social Forms and Entertainments

Points in Etiquette.

I am invited to a reception, from 8:30 to ten o'clock, and after that dancing. I am puzzled as to how I should dress. If gloves are worn, are they removed just before you go in for refreshments? About place cards, are they to help find one's place at the table, and are they taken or left by the plate when one has finished?—A. L. D.

Any evening dress is suitable for the occasion you mention. Gloves are usually removed when one is seated for refreshments and put on afterward. Place cards bear the name of the guest who is to occupy the seat, and are to be taken if the guest wishes. They are often hand-painted or otherwise elaborate, and in that case are intended as souvenirs or favors. A plain card with name of guest in ink answers every purpose and some hostesses have their monogram on plain cards for use as place indicators, writing the name of the guest themselves, sometimes adding the date if it is a very special occasion.

A Four-Year-Old's Birthday.

Will you kindly inform me how I should celebrate my child's fourth anniversary, and what should I have for a lunch—or what is best?—A Constant Reader.

Write notes in the name of your child, inviting the little ones to come to play and bring their mothers upon the day and date and hour designated. Use the party stationery if you can get it. Serve cocoa with whipped cream, or a marshmallow in each cup, whole wheat bread sandwiches, birthday cake (either sunshine or angel food) and ice cream. Peppermint kisses are harmless, or what is known as "kindergarten" candies.

Costume for Matron of Honor.

I shall appreciate your telling me a few things about a wedding. It is to be a simple home wedding at eight o'clock in the evening, and the bride is to marry in a traveling suit. What should the matron of honor wear? Does she have to wear a traveling suit, too? If not, would a white liberty satin do?—E. P.

The matron of honor would certainly outshine the bride if she wore a white satin gown. A white serge or broadcloth would be better, or a pretty light gray or tan reception dress.

The Proper Thing to Do.

Have received invitations to a tea, a musicale and reception, each on a visiting card. I wish to accept. How shall I answer in each case?

Do I make calls afterward and how soon?—A. B. C. D.

Use note paper or correspondence cards and accept or regret, as is your intention. Use the third person in replying, but do not use your visiting card; it is not good form. Make a call within the month.

A Bride-to-Be's Queries.

Is it proper for the bride to come to the wedding breakfast or any repast after the ceremony in her bridal dress? Or should she leave the guests and change for her traveling dress first? Should announcement cards be engraved?—Minnie.

A bride partakes of breakfast or any refreshments served after the ceremony in all the glory of her bridal robe. When she appears in her traveling gown it is to leave the house immediately. Announcement cards should be engraved.

Baskets for Basket Social.

Will you kindly suggest some way to shape a basket for a basket social? I would like to have something new or odd. And also, will you please tell me some colors that would be nice?—Anxious.

You can buy all kinds of dainty baskets very cheaply, those of Japanese manufacture made of wistaria are lovely. They may also be made of crepe tissue paper braided lightly and sewed into shape. Any colors are pretty. Choose what suits you best.

From a Boy.

Do you see any harm in two boy chums kissing when they meet and when alone with each other? Do you think a boy should pay "party calls" when he must work each day?—A Boy Reader.

I think it is strictly up to the boys if they wish to kiss, let them. There is nothing wrong in it, and I think the most beautiful sight I ever saw was the way an only son always embraced his father. Seems to me if a boy accepts hospitality, that he could find time on Sunday afternoon or evening to pay a party call.

MADAME MERRI.

Tam O'Shanter.

The velvet Tam O'Shanter is trying very hard to be popular, but it really suits so very few people that I do not think it has much of a future. There is a certain juvenility about it that takes on its style and makes it loom only suitable for a girl with her hair down.

Inexpensive Necklaces.

Some of the prettiest necklaces of the inexpensive sort are of cream, white or rose beads with rhinestone clasps. Necklaces of amber are also immensely smart.

MASSAGE BY SLAPS

New Treatment to Correct a Loose, Flabby Skin.

French Beauty Specialists Introduced This Innovation, and It Has Been Eagerly Taken Up in This Country.

By MME. ARMAND.

If your skin is loose and flabby and you hesitate to massage it for fear of pushing or dragging it—which, by the way, is very harmful, especially when lines are apparent—then try the newer treatment of slapping the flesh.

French beauty specialists believe more in slapping and kneading the flesh than in massage, and judging from the patronage they receive, it is a real success. Of course, the slapping is a sort of massage, but as it is applied with the flat of the hand, there is no pushing, pulling or dragging of the skin, which is likely to occur with ordinary massage if one is not careful and skilled in the work.

In taking one of these treatments not long ago I was told that the skin and flesh responded more quickly to this kind of work and that almost any part of the body could be filled out in much less time than with the ordinary massage.

It certainly makes the blood which is dormant and sluggish come to life. The regular pit-pat sends it tingling through the veins until it seems that the whole skin is aglow with fresh, warm blood. In the Turkish baths part of the treatment consists of slapping and kneading the entire body, and that is why one feels so good thereafter, because every bit of blood possible to reach has been set in motion.

How to Slap Your Own Face.

First cleanse the face thoroughly. Then warm the skin either by holding hot cloths upon it or by steaming it. Next pat in some of your favorite cream or skin food. Allow all that will to absorb and then with the flat of the hand slap firmly, yet severely, at the corners of the eyes and temples. The work of slapping is done best by alternating with the hands, using one and then the other. Next slap the cheeks from the sides of the nose. Work out over the jawbone and on to the neck. If what is known as the character lines, those which run from the nostril to the corners of the mouth, are deep, then push the tongue beneath the line and slap well. When working about the eyes do so very gently. Use only the cushion of the second finger tip. Remember always that the eyes are sensitive to any hard or vigorous application, so one must be careful to do no harm to them. The forehead may be slapped vigorously with the palms, and two fingers will suffice to slap the nose on each side.

Double Chin Needs Slapping.

To remove the superfluous fat and double chin, slap it vigorously. Lift up the head and with the back of the hands, alternately, slap upward, occasionally pressing the flesh toward the chin, never down toward the throat.

When the face, neck and chin have been sufficiently slapped they should tingle and smart, but not pain. Then after a few moments' rest the hands should be doubled up into fists, and the flesh softly kneaded all over, and wherever the skin is loose and baggy it should be picked up between the thumb and second finger and gently rolled back and forth. When finished the face can be cleansed of dust and foreign particles just as it is with ordinary massage. If you will take an old soft towel first to remove the superfluous cream you will notice how soiled it is. This slapping and kneading not only helps to fill out the flesh, but makes an excellent way of ridding the skin of many impurities.

Another Method of Using Cream.

It is very difficult to make some skins absorb oils and creams and no matter how hard one may try by steaming the skin and other warming methods to open the pores, the cream still remains on the surface. If your skin is of this texture, then, after steaming or warming it, rub a little of the cream on the tips of your fingers or the palms of the hands, and while you are slapping the skin this will work into it. A good many women prefer to be massaged in the same way, and do not care to have the cream rubbed on the face first. It certainly has the advantage over the old method of applying the cream, as it is more dainty and does not grease up the whole face or skin at once. You can also tell just how much cream the skin will absorb. If you take very little at first, and it works in, the hands become dry and then you may take up a little more, and in this manner you can tell that the cream is sinking into the skin.

Colored Caps.

A rather daring departure has been made in the matter of boudoir caps. Aside from the dainty Irish linen and lace of the same manufacture, colored ribbons are now being run through the lace openings at the bottom of the cap, and in some cases caps of gayly colored linen, with white lace, are being shown. This is strikingly new, because of the fact that white has always been the predominating color for a morning cap. In the colored caps Irish linen is not being used. These caps may last, but it is unlikely, as milady is discriminating and may refuse to depart from the elegant white linen cap.

Silk Blouses.

Many of the new blouses are made of silk and have linen collars and cuffs. A pretty blouse is made surplice fashion, with a sailor collar and undercuffs of dainty hand-embroidered linen, which may be removed and laundered.

Leather Sash Girdles.

There are sash girdles made of black patent leather, with oval buckles at each end, through which are run sashes of black satin with fringed ends.

HE KNEW WHAT TO AVOID

If Knowing Human Nature Would Do It This Man Would Have Made a Good Preacher.

"Dr. John Haynes Holmes, who preached a Bull Moose sermon to President Taft the Sunday before election day, isn't like Washington White," said a member of Dr. Holmes' Church of the Messiah in New York.

"Washington White was an aged [illegible]. Laying down his paper one evening, he said to his wife over his spectacles:

"'Martha, I believe I'd make a preacher. Listen, now, and I'll give you a sermon.'

"The old man then stood up to the table and bellowed out a vigorous discourse on the wickedness of the idolators of the Orient.

"His wife said at the end:

"'A good enough sermon, Washington, but you've told us all about the sins of the foreigners and never a word about the sins of the folks at home here.'

"'He, ha, ha, I understand preachin' too well for that,' laughed the wily old man."

ITCHING AND BURNING

Iberia, Mo.—"I was troubled with scalp eczema for about five years and tried everything I heard of, but all of no avail. The doctors told me I would have to have my head shaved. Being a woman, I hated the idea of that. I was told by a friend that the Cuticura Remedies would do me good. This spring I purchased two boxes of Cuticura Ointment and one cake of Cuticura Soap. After using one box of Cuticura Ointment I considered the cure permanent, but continued to use it to make sure and used about one-half the other box. Now I am entirely well. I also used the Cuticura Soap.

"The disease began on the back of my head, taking the form of a ringworm, only more severe, rising to a thick, rough scale that would come off when soaked with oil or warm water, bringing a few hairs each time, but in a few days would form again, larger each time, and spreading until the entire back of the head was covered with the scale. This was accompanied by a terrible itching and burning sensation. Now my head is completely well and my hair growing nicely." (Signed) Mrs. Geo. F. Clark, Mar. 25, 1912.

BERLIN'S WEST END

Comforts That May Be Had in Kurfurstendamm.

Section of Germany's Capital as Seen in 1912—Hotels, Cafes and Business Buildings All Have Modern Equipment.

Berlin.—Our European guide books are of little help if we wish to study the pulsating life of a modern city. There is in this respect hardly any difference between the English Murray, the French Joanne or the Baedeker made in Germany. They wish to give us a full list of the old established, hallmarked sights to which frequent allusions may be found in classical literature or modern fiction, but omit to take notice of the latest actualities. We are still directed by them to the Friedrichstrasse as the center of Berlin life. Such it was more than twenty years ago. As late as ten years ago the whirlpool of modern life was to be found at the Potsdamer platz, comparable to Piccadilly Circus in London. Nowadays it has shifted farther west to the long and broad avenue called Kurfurstendamm, says a Berlin correspondent. There we are in the "New West," the up-to-date part of the most modern of all European cities. Modern is also the accommodation the visitor may now find there. The "Boarding Place" that has just been opened is neither a hotel of the accustomed style nor a boarding house, but something between the two. If you ask for a room, a plan is handed to you, from which you see what accommodation there is, with prices inserted. If you want lodging for a week, a fortnight, a month, a year, the scale goes considerably down in proportion to the length of your stay. But with your furnished room you get also the comfort of dining rooms, an elegant cafe, a first-class restaurant of the German beer garden style, and all those conveniences of an American hotel for reading, writing and passing the time. It is a big building, containing 500 bedrooms, besides the lavishly spacious suites for general use and the halls for festivities. We have dwelt on these particulars because they are in bearing with the character of this magnificent thoroughfare of a new city.

It is astonishing how quickly fashionable society has moved into these quarters. Already now these outskirts of the city have developed a life of their own. Kurfurstendamm is now for Berlin life what the Fosse is for Vienna or the "Stroeg" between Kongens to Nytorv for Copenhagen, the promenade of the stylish part of the population. Here we find also that bohemian element and a great deal of that extravagance of high life for which Paris is famous. Of course the shops followed their best customers. In the beginning the old houses of the city opened branches for the west; then new elegant magazines of the Regent street type were founded; now there is already a peculiar style of Kurfurstendamm shop discernible. Superior taste and artistic decorations are indispensable requisites for these shops. One need only peep into the numerous new coffee houses along the street to get a notion of Kurfurstendamm style. In order to compete with their rivals each of these restaurants had to develop a specialty that was likely to attract patronage; everywhere good music is an attraction given into the bargain. Artists and literary men meet at some favorite place, elegant ladies of the fast set at another. The 5 o'clock tea attracts to the same rooms quite another class of people than you would find later in the evening. You see here crowded together what a generation ago was apparently missing in Berlin, people of vast means and with plenty of time. It is therefore quite understandable that the new term of Berlin W. W., i. e. the extreme west of Berlin, means the upper ten thousand as far as wealth and luxury go.

JURY BALKS AT PHOTOGRAPH

Women Members of Kansas Panel Refuse to Have Their Picture Taken.

Eldorado, Kan.—When Otis Boston, a photographer, attempted to take a picture of a jury composed of women in the county court here, his wife, who was on the jury, promptly left the box. She was followed by one of the other women and the two protesting jurors refused to return until they were assured by the court that no picture would be taken. Mrs. Boston does not believe that women should serve as jurors, but her husband favors the innovation.

DISQUALIFY A DOPED HORSE

Mare Trained by Sam Hildreth Is Set Back by French Racing Stewards—Charge Denied.

Sporting circles are agitated over the action of the stewards at Auteuil in disqualifying Camyre, a mare owned by Charles Kohler and trained by Sam Hildreth, after she won the Prix de la Vallee. The authorities based their disqualification on a charge that Camyre had been drugged, and declared that traces of stimulants were found in the horse's saliva.

Similar action has been taken by the stewards in the cases of several other horses, and the authorities have announced their determination to stamp out the "doping" of racers at Auteuil. Complaints against the practice have been unusually numerous this year.

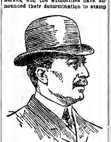
M. Monbel, one of the Frenchmen who incurred the penalty of disqualification, has declared his intention of taking the matter to the courts.

When Hildreth was asked what he thought of the stewards' verdict, he answered:

"Camyre was in normal condition when she won the race."

When he was asked what he intends to do in the matter he was as noncommittal as before, contenting himself with saying:

"What can be done against the decision of the stewards? Nothing at all."



Sam Hildreth.

1912 BIG YEAR IN BASEBALL

9,287 Players Participated in 47 Leagues of National Association, Says Farrell.

The report of Secretary John H. Farrell for the past year, presented at the annual meeting of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues in Milwaukee, shows that the present association comprises 47 leagues, embracing 322 towns and cities of the United States and Canada.

The report says 9,287 players' contracts were promulgated; 1,725 "terms accepted" were examined and promulgated; 2,168 players were reported released by purchase between national association clubs; 133 optional agreements were approved; 105 optional agreements were exercised; 3,425 players were reported for release; 548 players were reported for suspension; 325 players were reinstated; one player was declared ineligible; 239 players were selected by draft.

The national board of arbitration passed upon 936 disputed cases during the year and handed down decisions for the same, and 182 cases are on hand for disposal at the annual meeting now in progress.

The National league drafted 30 players, and the American league drafted 38. The National association drafted 141 players.

Total amount received through this office for drafted players including money refunded on National association drafts disallowed:

National league, $17,040; American league, $60,100; National association $70,950; total draft money, $174,460; amount paid on optional agreements $73,250. Amount paid for release by purchase of National association players, $123,000. Grand total $370,700.

McGinnity Buys Club.

Joe McGinnity is now a full-fledged club owner once more. He has purchased the majority of the stock in the Tacoma club of the Northwestern league. McGinnity will act as manager and also take his turn in the box.

Tribute to Brush.

President Comiskey of the White Sox says baseball will feel the loss of John T. Brush. "He was a power in the game," said Commy, "and the American league will miss him as much as the National."

Carlo's Great Record.

Anthony Carlo, the Browns' new southpaw, during the 1912 season won 38 of the 42 games that he pitched. Six of his games were no-run-no-hit affairs. He also hurled 24 shut-outs.

BARBER CUTS OUT FOOTBALL

Innocently Tried to Throw Ball Back to Players When Twenty-One of Them Fell on Him.

Football, with or without the forward pass, will no longer be on the list of favorite sports of Harman Stoeble of 6,950 Third avenue, Brooklyn. The Oriole and a team of aspiring Bay Ridgers were scheduled to wipe the earth with each other Sunday afternoon in a lot at 79th street and First avenue, in Brooklyn. Stoeble, being a barber, went out to see the long-haired athletes in action. The teams were well matched, the score was close and, as each side had its adherents, there was much excitement among the spectators.

Suddenly from the struggling line a player darted with the ball under his arm. He got free from tacklers and started up the field for a touchdown. The crowd urged him on and the pursuers pressed him. A principle of the game is to hold on to the ball, but this runner dropped it and it fell in front of Stoeble. Now, Stoeble was posted on the price of a face massage and knew how to strop a razor, but the rules of football, especially when the coveted ball is lying at one's feet, were things foreign to his daily round of reading.

However, he felt that he must act quickly, so he grabbed the pigskin and started to throw it out to the runner who had dropped it. Started to throw it, the referee says, is correct. When 21 players uncoiled and unwound themselves and uncovered Stoeble he had the ball still, but he wasn't saying anything.

Dr. Dugan, who hadn't expected to see the game, took Stoeble to the Norwegian hospital and found that the volunteer has a broken leg. He may have internal injuries, too, but it is believed he will recover.

NOTES of SPORTDOM

Stagg as usual stood the endurance test.

The Cincinnati papers are complaining that the Reds do not bat heavy enough.

Sixteen players have been killed on the gridiron this year against fourteen last year.

It's getting so a man has to win a pennant or get a new job. Especially in the big leagues.

Pitcher Carl Cashion of the Washington Senators says he is learning a new throw to first.

Jimmy O'Rourke and Charles Hemphill of Columbus have been sold to Bill Friel of St. Paul.

Ty Cobb has batted better than 300 in all the seven years that he has spent in fast company.

The New York Giants copped 319 bases last season, against 248 for Cincinnati, the next highest.

Jimmy Burke has been mentioned as a possibility to manage the Grand Rapids team next season.

Walter Johnson and Henry, says Clark Griffith, are the greatest battery that ever went into a ball game.

Yale thought she could knock the "Brick" out of Brickley, but Harvard took the "Pump" out of Pumpelly.

Captain Larry Doyle of the Giants has been engaged to coach the Seton Hall baseball team of New Jersey.

National league fans in Boston are looking to George Stallings to give them their first good ball club since 1901.

McGraw would like to know who put the "grass" in Snodgrass and who is responsible for the "merk" in Merkle.

Heinie Zimmerman, according to the figures, leads the National league with the war club, closely followed by an Indian.

Outfielder Connolly, who was caught in the draft by the Washington Senators from Montreal, batted for 316 last season.

Bat Nelson's manager contends the Hegewisch man is in the prime of life. "Dr." [illegible] and "Doc" Osler to the contrary.

Nobody has any sympathy for Miller Huggins since he accepted a job as Cardinal manager. They say it was his own fault.

Jack Ryder says the Athletics and the Red Sox will be contenders in the east, and the White Sox and the Tigers in the west.

Clark Griffith came so near getting the coveted flag in the American league in 1912 that he is busy already preparing to clinch the next one.

Manager George Stovall of the Browns says that he is against baseball players writing for papers. He must have been reading some of it.

George Baumgardner is a real find for the St. Louis Browns. He should be a great pitching asset for George Stovall during the season of 1913.

The latest in turbulent St. Louis is that Powell and Stephens, two of the oldest of the Browns in point of service, are to be released in favor of younger blood.

ROUND-HEADED APPLE TREE BORER WELL KNOWN OVER GREAT PORTION OF COUNTRY

Injurious Beetle Is Easily Recognized by Two Longitudinal Stripes of White Between Those of Brown on Back—Larva Descends to Lower Part of Burrow on Approach of Winter.

The round-headed apple tree borer is an insect known over the greater portion of the country. It bores into the apple, pear, quince and similar trees. The adult beetle is easily recognized by two longitudinal stripes of white between those of brown on the back.

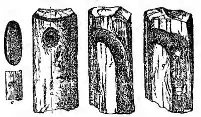
The beetle flies only by night, and is not likely to be seen by the orchardist. It appears early in the summer, and the female deposits her eggs in the bark of the tree, quite close to the ground.

The female makes an incision with her jaws in the bark, causing it to split open one-third to one-half inch in length, and thrusts the egg between the inner and outer bark, accompanying it with a gummy fluid, which covers and secures it in place. These hatch in a short time, and the small footless grub commences to eat its way into the bark. They usually remain in the tree as a grub for three years, during which time great damage is done to the trees infested.

The young lie for the first year in the sap wood and inner bark, excavating flat, shallow cavities which are filled with their sawdust-like castings. Their presence may be detected in young trees by the bark becoming dark colored, and sometimes dry and dead enough to crack, through which some of the sawdust-like matter often protrudes and falls to the ground.

On the approach of winter the larva descends to the lower part of its burrow, and doubtless remains inactive until spring. During the second season it attains about one-half its growth, still living on the sapwood, where it does great damage, and when, as often happens, there are several of these borers in a single tree, they will sometimes cause its death by completely girdling it. During the next season it cuts into the solid wood and secures itself in a safe retreat, goes into the chrysalis stage, and appears the next spring as an adult beetle.

The best remedy for this insect must be preventive. Apply washes to the trunk of the trees that are so repulsive to the borer that it will not lay its eggs on a tree protected by such washes. Soft soap, reduced to the consistency of a thin paint by the addition of washing soda, is recommended by eminent authorities. Carbolic acid solution is also recommended. This should be used with moderation, as it is liable to injure the foliage if applied too strongly. In case preventive measures fail, the insects should be dug out with a pocket knife, and where they have burrowed deep, they may be reached and killed with a stout wire thrust into their holes.



Work of the round headed apple tree borer. a, wound where egg is deposited; b, same with wood split lengthwise along the line (a, e), and turned so as to show an egg in place; c, same, with the bark split on the same line and removed to the left, so as to show the manner in which the egg is commonly thrust to one side under the bark; d, the egg, enlarged; e, hole of exit of beetle; f, the same, as it appears from the side when split along the line (a, e); g, the burrow, as it appears while the insect is in the pupa state, and before the bark is perforated.

MAKE CHARCOAL FOR THE HOGS

While Feeding on Corn Animals Never Appear to Get Too Much of Burned Cobs.

When hogs are being fed corn they have insatiable appetites for charcoal, and this goes to show the coal meets the requirements of the animal system. What is palatable seldom does the system any injury, and then only when taken in excess, which it is likely to be if the animals are not accustomed to it, especially if they are hungry. The fact that hogs when on full feed of corn eat all forms of charcoal with avidity and never get too much of it is sufficient grounds for providing it in abundance and keeping it within reach of the hogs at all times.

I utilize all the corncobs on my place for making charcoal to feed my hogs, says a writer in the Iowa Homestead. I dig a pit about five feet deep, which is smaller at the bottom than at the top, in which to burn the cobs. I start a fire at the bottom and gradually fill with cobs, then cover the pit with a sheet iron lid. Earth may be used in covering the pit if a large lid is not available. In about 12 hours the combustion has produced an exceedingly good grade of corncob charcoal.

In feeding the charcoal, I make up the following mixture: Five bushels of corncob charcoal, one bushel of wood ashes, eight pounds of salt, two quarts of air-slacked lime, two pounds of sulphur and a pound of copperas. I break up the charcoal, mix all thoroughly together, put the mixture in self-feeding boxes and place where the hogs can have free access to it. This combination furnishes a good percentage of ash for bone building, destroys worms and helps wonderfully in keeping the hogs in a thrifty condition. The amount of charcoal that a bunch of hogs will eat during the winter if given free access to it at all times is really very surprising.

Value of a Cultivator.

Professor Massey says: "The man who walks across the fields four times or even two times to cultivate each row of corn or cotton wastes enough labor in one season, if he has a crop of any size, to pay for a two-horse cultivator." If you doubt this statement just take a day off and figure it out with your pencil and paper.

Sharp Hoes.

Keep the hoes sharp. A file should be kept in the field when working and used as often as necessary to maintain sharp edges. A sharp hoe works more easily and accomplishes more in a day with less weariness to the workman.

Change of Runs Advisable.

If the chickens are raised on new ground each year, the danger of disease creeping in one season, contaminating the growth and attacking the chicks the next season, is avoided.

Milk for Poultry.

Milk is excellent food for poultry. It should be used in place of water in mixing the mash.

Dry Picked Poultry.

Dry-picked poultry will stand longer shipments than those that are scalded.

BATS KILL MANY NOXIOUS INSECTS

None of Species That Inhabit United States Do Any Harm—Guano of Value.

(By H. W. HENSHAW, United States Department of Agriculture.)

There is no doubt of the great value of bats in the destruction of mosquitoes and other noxious insects, especially beetles. For years we have been interested in the subject and have examined many bat stomachs with a view to finding out the precise species upon which the different bats feed.

The investigation, however, is beset with difficulties owing to the fact that bats habitually seem to thoroughly chew their insect food before swallowing it, with the result that the determination even of general insects taken for food is very difficult, while the identification of soft-bodied insects like mosquitoes is practically impossible. Because they destroy so many insects we advocate the protection of bats wherever they occur.

None of the species that inhabit the United States do any harm, although they sometimes cause annoyance by congregating in large numbers in the attics or under the eaves of country houses, when the noise they make coming and going frequently disturbs the inmates of the house. This trouble, however, can always be easily cured by stopping up the holes and compelling the bats to take up their residence elsewhere.

In connection with the economic importance of bats the value of their guano as a fertilizer is not to be overlooked, as it brings a high price wherever it can be obtained in marketable quantities. In fact the erection of artificial shelters for bats for the purpose of obtaining the guano has frequently been advocated, as also has an attempt to increase the number of the mammals having in mind their destruction of noxious insects, especially mosquitoes.

We know of at least one instance in Mexico where a small dwelling was given up to the exclusive use of bats for the purpose of annually or semi-annually gathering the guano for sale.

Duroc-Jersey Swine.

The Duroc-Jersey is a more refined hog of the lard type. It thrives splendidly on corn, clover, blue grass or alfalfa pasture. The animal is adapted to a great range of climate and does well in dry or warm regions that are unsuitable to other types. Swine to follow steers form a valuable adjunct of every feed lot. These Jerseys won prizes at many state fairs in the west.

Exhausted Soil.

The farmer who wakes up to the fact that his soil is exhausted and will not produce as it once did is in the position of a man who has overdrawn his bank account. He must make good, and that quickly.

Red Clover and Clay Loam.

Red clover is adapted for growth on a wide range of soils, but it does best on a good clay loam which is well drained. Acid soils do not produce clover successfully. The addition of lime cures acidity.

MADE A DEMAND FOR ROSES

Florist's Business Materially Increased Through Action of Enterprising Young Lady.

Many months had passed since first he met the sweet, sweet girl. He loved her dearly, but he was woefully shy, and his suit made but slow progress.

Finally, it was the girl who decided to improve the shining hour, and add a stride to the pace of the proceedings. To make up her mind was to act, and the very next time the young man called she pointed to the rose that adorned his button hole.

"I'll give you a kiss for that rose," she blurted out.

A crimson, guilty flush overspread the young man's face, like the light of the setting sun. There was, however, no hesitation on his part, and he clinched the bargain. Then he grabbed his cap and proceeded to rush from the room in double quick time.

"And where are you going?" she asked in great surprise.

"Oh," he answered tremulously, "I'm just off to the florist's to buy up his stock of roses!"—London Answers.

WICKLIFFE

To the readers of the Lake County Herald, also Mr. Editor and all, the correspondent of Wickliffe wishes you a Merry Christmas and a prosperous New Year.

It is reported Mr. Fuller, post master of Wickliffe, is quite ill with rheumatism the last few days, and is confined to his bed.

GAS ROARS AND OIL FLOWS FROM WELL

There was nothing doing last week at the Showalter gas and oil well on the Hitchcock farm at Little Mountain.

The same kind of mystery surrounds the well that is always observed when a well is drilled in, whether it is a paying hole or not.

Mystery at the Showalter well is intensified, at least in the minds of the farmer people who reside roundabout, because of the fact that gas is roaring out of the end of a 6-inch sandpipe with which the well is plugged, and oil also gushes out. The gas looks like steam.

The sandpipe protrudes nearly 20 feet above the well. The oil gushes over the top of it at frequent intervals with a sort of breathing sound, and has saturated everything around the base of the derrick, even to a large pile of tubing that was rushed there from Pittsburg to pipe the gas, and which has not been used up to this time.

The crude oil has even run down the hill into a small creek, and some of it is now greasing the waters of the Chagrin. It would be unsafe to toss lighted matches anywhere around the base of the derrick, which is 85 feet high.

When the big gas vein was tapped, the drillers went 13 feet further and struck oil. Just how much oil is a matter of conjecture, but it is the real thing that gushes over the sides of the sandpipe 20 feet above the ground.

Hundreds of strangers have visited the well within the past two weeks, and many of them have expressed wonder that the hole was not "shot." The land in the neighborhood is practically all under lease, and the owners are anxious to know the extent of the find.

There is only about 250 feet of casing in the hole. Several days before the work was stopped, at a depth of over 3,000 feet, the drillers said: "We are over half a mile from our work, and don't like to be so far away from it."

The well is owned by Showalter & Showalter, a brother and sister of Pittsburg, the brother being in active management. Mr. Showalter says he has overseen the work of drilling 36 wells, and only got one dry hole, this being his 37th well.

The site of the Showalter well is on what was formerly the L. H. Carver farm.—Chardon Republican.

WHEN FROST IS ON THE PUNKIN

One of the Most Popular of James Whitcomb Riley's Boone Co. Poems

When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock,
And you hear the kyouck and gobble of the struttin' turkey-cock,
And the clackin' of the guineys, and the cluckin' of the hens,
And the rooster's hallylooyer as he tip-toes on the fence;
O, it's then's the times a feller is a-feelin' at his best,
With the risin' sun to greet him from a night of peaceful rest,
As he leaves the house, bare-headed, and goes out to feed the stock,
When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock.

They's something kind o' hearty-like about the atmusfere
When the heat of summer's over and the coolin' fall is here;
Of course we miss the flowers, and the blossums on the trees,
And the mumble of the hummin'-birds and buzzin' of the bees;
But the air's so appetizin'; and the landscape through the haze
Of a crisp and sunny morning of the airly autumn days
Is a pictur' that no painter has the colorin' to mock—
When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock.

The husky, rusty russel of the tossels of the corn,
And the raspin' of the tangled leaves, as golden as the morn;
The stubble in the furries—kindo' lonesome-like, but still
A-preachin' sermuns to us of the barns they growed to fill;
The strawstack in the medder, and the reaper in the shed;
The hosses in theyr stalls below—the clover overhead!—
O, it sets my heart a-clickin' like the tickin' of a clock,
When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock!

Then your apples all is gethered, and the ones a feller keeps
Is poured around the cellar-floor in red and yeller heaps;
And your cider-makin' 's over, and your wimmern-folks is through
With their mince and apple-butter, and theyr souse and sausage, too!
I don't know how to tell it—but ef sich a thing could be
As the angels wantin' boardin', and they'd call around on me—
I'd want to 'commodate 'em—all the whole-indurin' flock—
When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock!

Last week the snowfall was sufficient south of Painesville for farmers to take out their bob sleds and start for Painesville, but when they arrived in Painesville the roads were bare and made poor sledding. Director of Safety Murphy has a communication in the Daily Telegraph this week in which he shows a lack of confidence in the proposition to change the form of our municipal government. Murphy says that the movement is being promoted by lawyers, "a circumstance of itself suspicious," and he believes there is undue haste in the matter, and that it would be well to let some other cities try the experiment before any change is made at Painesville.

About a dozen initiative and referendum petitions for new state laws are in circulation over the state which shows that this method of legislation is going to be used to great advantage. But of the petitions we have heard of none seem more popular than Col. Coxey's petition for good roads. It is a good plan to refuse your signature to any paper you do not thoroughly understand, for many of the petitions are put out by some special interest that could not command any support at the polls.

OFFICIAL REPORT

Of The Department of Agriculture on Condition of Crops

The following report is from returns from the official correspondents of the Department.

The growing condition of the wheat plant over the state is quite satisfactory. A greater part of the wheat area was sown late, and while now the plant is small it is thought to be well rooted and in good condition to go into winter. During the month of November wheat growth was retarded, owing to the exceedingly dry weather. Reports of damage by fly to early seeded wheat are very general. The state average is estimated at 4 per cent. Approximately one-half of the harvest was sold as soon as threshed. The present condition of the growing plant is estimated at 52 per cent compared with an average. This is a decline of 6 per cent since the issuance of the November report. One year ago wheat condition was estimated at 83 per cent.

The late open fall was most favorable to the corn crop and a bountiful harvest has resulted. The estimated 1912 corn area as returned by township assessors was 3,213,667 acres. From this the harvest has produced 127,868,844 bushels, an average of 40 bushels per acre. This is the largest production Ohio has harvested since 1911. In that year 3,361,166 acres yielded 143,161,675 bushels. The crop generally is of excellent quality and was cribbed in fine condition. The average market price is estimated at 49 cents per bushel.

Reports from correspondents show that the apple crop of the present year was but 60 per cent of the crop of 1911, which was the largest crop harvested in the last decade. The general supposition was that this year's crop was fully as large as that of last year, and with respect to commercial orchards this is true. The difference is due almost entirely to the full crop of the general farm orchard throughout the state in 1911 and shows the important part these orchards play when total production is considered. This year there was no crop in these orchards in many sections of the state with the result that the total production is but little more than two-thirds of last year's crop.

The average production per acre of tobacco is estimated at 788 pounds. Last year the estimated yield per acre was 887 pounds.

The number of sheep and cattle being fed for market is far below an average, although the estimated number now reported is greater than one year ago.

VICIOUS ATTACK

ONE WOMAN HELD UP, ANOTHER ESCAPES

Arrest Made and the Man Well Known Here is Held on Most Serious Charge

The usual quiet and good cheer of a Painesville Christmas eve, was broken in upon by most brutal attack and robbery on St. Clair street, and an attempt at hold-up on Mentor Ave. The parties attacked were women. Mrs. W. C. Green was knocked down on St. Clair street near High. Her pocketbook was taken, she was so severely injured that her removal to the hospital was necessary. The woman received every attention and her recovery is expected.

Mrs. Pardee of Cleveland, was attacked on Mentor avenue near Jefferson street. She managed to escape from her assailant.

Later in the evening a man who was found prowling about the residence of Sam Carruthers on N. St. Clair street, was arrested, and evidence was soon in possession of the police which seemed to indicate that he was the man who had made the attack upon the women.

The man has been employed in one of the local blacksmith shops. He is a man of family and during the two years that he has resided in this city has borne a good reputation. When arrested he was under the influence of liquor.

The Twilight of the Year

The old year is gone,
It has faded away,
As the twilight to night time
Fades, at the close of each day.
'Tis the time of our harvest
When we measure our grain,
As the reaper who counts up
His losses and gain.

He sifts as he measures
The chaff from the wheat
As weed cast from our thoughts
The sad for the sweet
For we sowed, as the sower
That scattered his grain,
Some good and some bad,
Some pleasure, some pain.

When the sun of the springtime
Shines again on the hills
And the rain showers spatter,
In river and rills
The blades of the wheat
Under skies smiling and blue,
Will spring up in the earth
And its growth will renew.

We too must look up, toward
The bright new year sun,
And forget the deeds
That can ne'er be undone,
And build over our ash heaps
The best that we know,
New castles, let us light them
With kindness, to glow.

Yes the old year has faded
From twilight tonight,
Its moments on fleet wings
Down time's valley took flight,
They fled all to swiftly
And never, never, again
Can we grasp one we lost,
Though we sigh all in vain.

— Mrs. Martha E. Bales,
Willoughby, Ohio.

ITEMS OF INTEREST

From The Ohio Department of Agriculture

The new Serum Plant, twelve miles east of Columbus, is nearing completion. Hog cholera may be wiped out of the state by the use of this serum as an immunizer. The cost of one battleship would stop the swine plague in Ohio.

Five hundred and ten boys, average age 16, averaged 85 bushels of corn per acre in the corn growing contest. The average for men in Ohio is 35 bushels. Ninety-three boys raised over 100 bushels per acre. Moral—Be a boy.

Who has the best cow in the neighborhood is now a leading question at the farmer institutes. Each meeting is furnished with a Babcock milk tester which discovers the boarder cow and the profitable animal. Many farmers are surprised at results and sometimes ashamed of them.

Each state instructor at farmer institutes has a supply of litmus paper, with which samples of soil can be tested for acid or alkali. Many farmers are finding out why they can not grow clover, and by so doing make good wages attending the institute.

From reports received, one farmer in six would rather go to a circus or Nickelodium, than attend a farmer meeting.

Some farmers would not let their own son take the time to take the trip to Washington, even when the public spirited business man in town wanted to pay the boy's way. The father could not spare the boy in winter time from hard work. It is not strange that boys leave the farm.

At many institutes there will be a new and latest improved machine to test corn for the per cent. of moisture it has in it. Time required about 25 minutes. The experiment is interesting and instructive. Few farmers know how to grade corn. In the near future corn will be sold according to its moisture test. Some farmers are getting ready for it. Many independent institutes will be held.

Hay For The Moose

The other day William Allen White, head of the bull moose party in Kansas, sent a letter to Fred Hammond of Burlington, saying: "The bull moose needs more hay. Please raise some money among the brethren and send it to me."

Now Hammond happens to be an ardent standpatter. So he skirmished around town and found a confederate $50 bill. He sent it to White with this letter: "The money inclosed was good enough for the fellows who were fighting the republican party in the '60s, as you are doing to day. It ought to be good enough for you."—K. C. Journal.

PARCEL POST MAP OF THE UNITED STATES

This map is for use only in Unit No. 1071, in which the city of Washington is located.
Numbered squares represent units of area; circles indicate boundaries of zones

PARCEL POST RATES REGULATED THROUGH SYSTEM OF ZONES

Uncle Sam's New Enterprise Clearly Explained—How Charges Are Fixed and What Class of Merchandise May Be Carried Through the Mails Under the New Law.

By EDWARD B. CLARK

With the coming of the New Year the United States government will enter into a new field of enterprise—the transmittal of merchandise by what is known as the parcel post.

It is no exaggeration to say that thousands upon thousands of inquiries have been made of the postmaster general as to just what the parcel post will mean to the people. It was the law of congress establishing the system which made provision for a division of the country in zones and into 35,000 units which are to be used as centers in describing the circles which mark the boundaries of the zones. There has been no clear understanding, apparently, of this zone system, but really it is a very simple matter.

The accompanying map shows the country divided into zones from the unit in which Washington is situated, as the center. Accompanying the map is a table showing the rate of postage per pound for parcels from Washington to places within all the zones.

Each unit contains an area thirty miles square. Now each unit is a center from which the zones are drawn and so every unit in the country no matter where it is situated will have zones drawn from it just exactly as Washington has them drawn from it. For instance, take Keokuk, in which is in a unit in the fifth zone. From that will be drawn circles exactly as they are drawn from Washington and they will be numbered from Keokuk as number one just as they are numbered from Washington as number one. Of course, however, Zone Six will have a different geographical position as related to Keokuk than it has as related to Washington, but as the radius of the circles drawn from Keokuk is the same length as the radius of the circles drawn from Washington, Keokuk's Zone Six will be just as far from its center as Washington's Zone Six is.

How Rates Are Fixed.

It can be seen from this readily enough that the postal rates from Washington to its particular zone will be the same as the postal rates from Keokuk to its particular zones. Each unit being about thirty miles square will of course contain in most cases a number of postoffices, but each office in the same unit is considered as being the center of the circles from which the zones are drawn. The rates of postage are fixed from the unit in which the sending postoffice is situated, but the price to every place in any zone is just the same. To illustrate, it will cost exactly the same amount to send a parcel from Washington to Erie, Pa., that it costs to send it to Atlanta, Ga., because Erie and Atlanta with reference to Washington are situated in the fourth zone. The rates therefore are fixed from the unit in which the postoffice is located, but they are the same from that office to any point in any one zone.

It will be seen by reference to the table of rates of postage that it will cost more per pound to send a package a long distance than it does to send it a short distance. The rate increases for a package weighing one pound at the rate of one cent for each zone. No package weighing more than 11 pounds can be sent under the new parcel post law. It should be said right here that on the long hauls the parcel post may not be able to compete with the express companies, but that on shorter hauls it can so compete. It was the expressed desire of the legislators and of the postoffice officials that the parcel post system should be made of particular use to persons having farm and factory products to transmit to customers. It can be said in a general way that anything can be sent which is properly wrapped and which will not injure other mail matter with which it may come in contact.

Copy Foreign Countries.

It is probable that the government will adopt a means of transportation for certain kinds of its merchandise much like those which have been adopted in parcel post countries abroad. What the English call hampers, basket-like arrangements, probably will be adopted, and as these can be kept separate from the ordinary mail matter it is believed that the regulations as finally adopted will allow the sending of eggs, butter, dressed poultry, live poultry, honey, fruit, and other products of the country.

The 11 pound limit for a single package may work at first against any very extended use of the parcel post for some of the articles which have been named. Of course, more weight can be sent if it is sent in different parcels, but the cost in that case would be heavier, because the increase per pound on a single package is not great up to 11 pounds, and probably it would increase at no greater rate if the government were to raise the limit of weight which is now fixed.

Every postmaster in the United States will have a parcel post map like the one which is here reproduced except that the zone lines will be shown with the unit of his postoffice as a center. All that a postmaster will have to do when a parcel is presented for transportation is to find out in what zone the destination of the package lies. His table will show him instantly the rate per pound from the unit in which his postoffice lies to the zone of the package's destination, the price, as has been explained before, to every postoffice in any one zone being the same. The parcel post will take nothing but fourth class matter. Printed matter is still in the third-class designation. Therefore books cannot be sent by the parcel post system.

Rate on Seeds Not Affected.

It should be said that the act of congress which puts a parcel post plan into operation does not in any way affect the postage rate on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, scions and plants as fixed by section 482 of the postal laws and regulations.

The classification of articles mailable as well as the weight limit, the rates of postage, zone or zones and other conditions of mailability under the act of congress, if the postmaster general shall find on experience "that they or any of them are such as to prevent the shipment of articles desirable, or shall permanently render the cost of the service greater than the receipts of the revenue therefrom, he is hereby authorized, subject to the consent of the interstate commerce commission [illegible] investigation, to reform from time [illegible] time such classification weight limits, rates, zone or zones or conditions, in order to promote the service to the public or to insure the receipt of revenue from such service adequate to pay the cost thereof."

RATES OF POSTAGE

Parcels weighing four ounces or less are mailable at the rate of one cent for each ounce or fraction of an ounce, regardless of distance. Parcels weighing more than four ounces are mailable at the pound rate, as shown by the following table, and when mailed at this rate any fraction of a pound is considered a full pound.

RULES GOVERNING MAILING OF PACKAGES UNDER NEW SYSTEM

After Jan. 1 One May Mail Anything Weighing Not More Than 11 Pounds by Parcel Post—Perishable Articles May Be Sent Under Specific Restrictions.

Postmaster General Hitchcock has just approved the regulations which cover in detail the articles which may or may not be sent by parcel post.

The rules as to what can be sent and what cannot be sent and the instructions for the preparation of mailable articles with other "official advice" are given here as they have just been prepared by the postoffice department in Washington.

The minimum rate will be five cents for the first pound and three cents for each additional pound to any point not exceeding fifty miles from the office of mailing; the local rate, which is five cents for the first pound and one cent for additional pound, applies to all parcels the delivery of which does not involve their transportation on railway lines. The rates increase for each successive one of the eight zones, the maximum rate being twelve cents a pound, which will carry a parcel across the continent or to any of our possessions. Parcels will be limited to eleven pounds in weight and six feet in length and girth combined.

Mailable Perishable Articles.

Butter, lard and perishable articles such as fish, fresh meats, dressed fowls, vegetables, fruits, berries and articles of a similar nature that decay quickly, when so packed or wrapped as to prevent damage to other mail matter, will be accepted for local delivery either at the office of mailing or on any rural route starting therefrom. When inclosed in an inner cover and a strong outer cover of wood, metal, heavy corrugated pasteboard or other suitable material and wrapped so that nothing can escape from the package, they will be accepted for mailing to any offices within the first zone or within a radius of 50 miles. Butter, lard, or any greasy or oily substance intended for delivery at offices beyond the first zone must be suitably packed. Vegetables and fruit that do not decay quickly will be accepted for mailing to any zone if packed so as to prevent damage to other mail matter. Eggs will be accepted for local delivery when securely packed in a basket or other container. RINGWORM ON CHILD'S FACE

Stratford, Iowa.—"Three years ago this winter my seven-year-old son had ringworm on the face. First it was in small red spots which had a rough crust on the top. When they started they looked like little red dots and then they got bigger, about the size of a bird's egg. They had a white rough ring around them, and grew continually worse and soon spread over his face and legs. The child suffered terrible itching and burning, so that he could not sleep nights. He scratched them and they looked fearful. He was cross when he had them. We used several bottles of liniment, but nothing helped.

Merely an Amateur.

A man who lives much at hotels had some odd experiences during the strikes of the waiters in New York and Boston.

On the morning after the strike was called in New York he ordered boiled eggs in a New York hotel. The managers had hired all applicants for jobs at waiting, and the one who took this boiled egg order was a tough person. He brought the eggs, came over and leaned on the back of the patron's chair and said:

"Say, cul, kin I shuck them eggs fer yez?"

In Boston the waiter at breakfast was a big, burly person who seemed unfamiliar with the work. The man at breakfast ventured a mild protest.

"Aw, fergit it!" said the waiter. "I ain't no waiter. I came up here to be a strike-breaker in the truckman's strike."—Saturday Evening Post.

SYNOPSIS.

Harding Kent calls on Louise Farrish to propose marriage and finds the house in great excitement over the attempted suicide of her sister Katharine. Kent starts an investigation and finds that Hugh Crandall, suitor for Katharine, who had been forbidden the house by General Farrish, had talked with Katharine over the telephone just before she shot herself. A torn piece of yellow paper is found, at sight of which General Farrish is stricken with paralysis. Kent discovers that Crandall has left town hurriedly. Andrew Elser, an aged banker, commits suicide about the same time as Katharine attempted her life. A yellow envelope is found in Elser's room. Post Office Inspector Davis, Kent's friend, takes up the case. Kent is convinced that Crandall is at the bottom of the mystery. Katharine's strange outcry puzzles the detectives. Kent and Davis search Crandall's room and find an address, Lock Box 17, Ardway, N. Y. Kent goes to Ardway to investigate and becomes suspicious of a "Henry Cook." A woman commits suicide at the Ardway Hotel. A yellow letter also figures in this case. Kent calls Louise on the long distance telephone and finds that she had just been called by Crandall from the same booth. "Cook" disappears. The Ardway postmaster is missing. Inspector Davis arrives at Ardway and takes up investigation. He discovers that the dead woman is Sarah Sacket of Bridgeport. Louise telephones Kent imploring him to drop the investigation. Kent returns to New York to get an explanation from Louise. He finds the body of a woman in Central Park and more yellow letters. He sees Crandall, whom he recognizes as "Cook," enter the Farrish home. Louise again implores Kent to drop the investigation and refuses to give any explanation. Later Kent sees Crandall and Louise in an automobile. Kent returns to Ardway. Davis announces that he has planned to arrest the missing postmaster and also the master criminal. While seeking the criminals Kent comes across Louise and Crandall. Pursued by Davis the postmaster jumps off a precipice and is killed. Aleck Young, the master criminal, is found in a hut in a morphine stupor. Louise tells Kent that she and Crandall had come to get papers from Young which gave him a strange hold over General Farrish. It is shown that Crandall's only interest in the case was to help Katharine recover her father's papers. Young is shackled and bound, with morphine just out of his reach, in an attempt to make him confess and give up the papers.

CHAPTER XV.—(Continued.)

"If you had seen the name of Andrew Elser in it," said Davis, "would you not have examined it?"

"Was his name there?"

"Yes, and also the names of the Bridgeport victim and Dora Hastings and Henry Eberle. It was Young or Rouser who sent out the yellow letters and checked the list, using just plain, ordinary shorthand for such words as 'Sent,' 'Answered,' 'Five Thousand.' Fortunately the list shows that while more than five hundred letters were sent out, hardly a dozen had brought responses, and in only three cases had money been received."

"Was General Farrish's name on the list?"

"No," answered Davis sleepily, "but I hardly expected to find it there."

"And the letters sent out," I persisted, "were they the yellow letters?"

"Of course."

"What was in them?"

"That's just what I've got to find out from Young," said Davis, and in another minute he was fast asleep.

As I saw Davis lying there a new thought came to me. If he could extract the information he wanted from Young, what was to hinder me from doing it. Surely our prisoner by now had seen the hopelessness of his position and would be ready to talk. At least there would be no harm in trying.

I entered the room where Young was, and, approaching his couch, laid my hand on his shoulder. He had been lying there with his eyes closed, and the mere touch of my hand so jolted his shattered nerves that his whole body bounded to the limit of his bonds. His tightened lips showed how difficult it was for him to suppress a scream.

"Look here, Young," said I, "I've come to you as a friend to tell you just how the land lies. Rouser is dead and the inspector has possession of all his papers. He knows everything about the yellow letters."

An evil smile was Young's only answer—the cunning leer of the man who scents a trick.

"There are stacks and stacks of evidence against you. We have the list of people to whom Rouser sent letters."

"Damn your evidence!" he sneered. "You may have evidence against that fool Rouser, but you've nothing on me. If the inspector, as you call him, had evidence enough to convict me, do you suppose he'd have me tied up here? He hasn't a bit of evidence against me. He never will have. Reach me that medicine."

He jerked his head in the direction of the morphine that lay so tantalizing near. There was something in his voice, some indefinable power of persuasiveness that almost influenced me to do what he asked. Involuntarily my hand went out to the bottle containing the solution, but I caught myself in time.

"Go on, hand it to me," he begged. "Can't you see how I need it? Give it to me and I'll tell you anything you want to know."

"Tell me first," said I, "and you can have it."

"I can't talk, I can't think," he cried, "till I get it. You can see for yourself how shaky I am."

I could see for myself that he was suffering the torture of the damned. Every muscle in his body seemed to be jerking involuntarily, doubling itself into little hungry knots that joined his aching nerves in the shrill clamor for morphine—morphine.

"Give me just one dose," he pleaded, "and I'll tell you anything, everything you want to know. I'll die if I don't get it."

So pitiable was his condition that I found myself sympathizing with him in spite of myself. My eyes followed his glance to the chair near the couch, where, beside the hypodermic syringe and the morphine, Davis, as if to accentuate the torture of his fetters, had placed the key that unlocked them. I would not have known how to administer the morphine even if I had wished to do so, and besides, I had a strong aversion to drugging a fellow-man, but as I saw the key there, I thought of a solution.

"If I unlock the fetters on your arms," said I, "so that you can reach the morphine, will you promise me to answer my question?"

"I'll promise on my word of honor to answer every question you ask," he replied, an eager light coming into his eyes.

"I swear it—on my mother's honor."

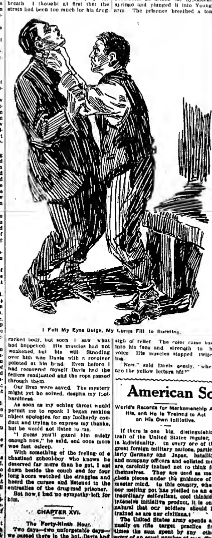
Thinking how amazed Davis would be when he awoke to learn that I had the prisoner's full confession I reached for the key. Young turned over as far as he could to permit me to unlock the fetters.

Then, quick as lightning, as the steel fell away from his wrists, his hands shot out and clutched my neck with maniac strength. I felt my eyes bulge, my lungs fill to bursting. I put forth my hands to try to shake off his grip, but I felt my strength fast failing.

Athletically inclined though I have always been and matched though I was against a drug-weakened wretch with fettered feet, I found myself no equal for his maniacal desperation. Back and forth over the couch we swayed in a silent death struggle, my cut-off breath all the while pounding unpurified through my bursting lungs, my brain turning weak and my sight growing dim. I was beaten. I knew I could hold out but a few seconds longer.

There passed through my mind in my struggles a vivid picture of what was about to happen. Young would silently choke me to death. Silently he would hobble with his fettered feet to where Davis lay in the lean-to sound asleep and brain him with a blow. He would cast off his fetters and long before the constable would return to find our bodies would make his escape on Rouser's bicycle. The mystery of the yellow letters never would be explained. Poor Louise—

Young's hands fell from my throat and I staggered back gasping for breath. I thought at first that the strain had been too much for his drug-racked body, but soon I saw what had happened. His muscles had not weakened, but his will. Standing over him was Davis with a revolver pointed at his head. Even before I had recovered myself Davis had the fetters readjusted and the rope passed through them.



I Felt My Eyes Bulge, My Lungs Fill to Bursting.

Our lives were saved. The mystery might yet be solved, despite my foolhardiness.

As soon as my aching throat would permit me to speak I began making abject apologies for my foolhardy conduct and trying to express my thanks, but he would not listen to me.

"I guess you'll guard him safely enough now," he said, and once more was fast asleep.

With something of the feeling of a chastised school-boy who knows he deserved far more than he got, I sat down beside the couch and for four long hours watched the struggles and heard the curses and listened to the entreaties of the drug-mad prisoner. But now I had no sympathy left for him.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Forty-Ninth Hour.

Two days—two unforgettable days—we passed there in the hut, Davis and I and our self-tortured prisoner. Each day the constable came and went, the first day to tell us that the inspector's plan for disposing of the postmaster's body had been successful and that no suspicion had been aroused. The second day a pleasanter mission brought him to deliver telegrams from Crandall and Louise that all was well, that the general was slowly improving and that Katharine was recovering rapidly.

And all the while Young lay there bound, defying us, now cursing, now pleading, now in brilliant phrases striving to convince us by logical arguments so deft, so forceful, so cunning that a weaker and less wise man than Davis might have been convinced by them.

His logic failing he would turn to merciless invective and ribald threats, his penetrating voice making the whole hut hideous as he prophesied for us both grotesque horrible deaths, brain-breaking punishments in this world and the next. Then, overcome once more by the intensity of his unsatisfied desire for the drug that had long been his master, he would moan and plead and weep for morphine. At times delusions would seize his brain. By the hour he would rave of beautiful cities and wonderfully fair women and pleasant pastimes. Majestic lines of poetry would flow from his fevered lips, to end in a shriek of agony as his quivering, knotted muscles all but tore his nerves apart. Again the weird morphine fantasies would take hold of him and a rush of horrible grotesque ribaldries would foul the air.

But after forty-eight hours of this terrible torture nature would be put off no longer. She demanded rest. Young had sunk into a troubled, uneasy sleep about seven in the morning. Davis and I having spelled each other as guards during the night sat talking about our prisoner. I happened to remark that it was a pity that capital punishment could not remove such criminals as Young from the earth. The inspector, in spite of the rigorous way he had kept up the torture, seemed to have strong sympathy for Young.

"I don't believe in capital punishment at all," he said explosively. "Our whole system is wrong. It took us a good many centuries to discover that insane persons didn't need prisons, but doctoring. They just can't help being criminals. Stand behind a line of prisoners as they march in to breakfast in the penitentiary. Not one of them will have a normal head. Is that their fault? It is the fault of society. It's our fault."

There was a stir on the couch and Young opened his eyes. The fire of the drug-madness and the look of hate seemed to have vanished.

"I give up," he said. "I can't stand the strain any longer. I'll tell you anything you want to know."

He spoke quietly and calmly. Yet there was something in his voice that rang true. I felt that this time he meant what he said. Apparently Davis, too, realized that at last Young's spirit was broken. Without hesitation he seized the hypodermic syringe and plunged it into Young's arm. The prisoner breathed a long sigh of relief. The color came back into his face and strength to his voice. His muscles stopped twitching.

"Now," said Davis gently, "where are the yellow letters hid?"

"In a tin-box under a flat stone near the spring," Young replied.

"Which stone?"

"It's the third from the spring coming this way."

Davis was up like a shot and out the door, reappearing quickly with an ordinary document box.

"And the Farrish papers—where are they?" he asked sharply.

"They are in the box, too," said Young wearily. "May I have another shot?"

Davis studied his face and felt his pulse and then reached for the syringe.

"Where's the key?" he asked as he finished administering the morphine.

"In my left trousers' pocket," Young answered apathetically.

Quickly Davis possessed himself of the key and opened the box. In the top tray were perhaps fifty letters type-written on yellow paper, with a blank left for the name to be filled in. Without stopping to read the letters which seemed to be all after the same form, Davis lifted the tray. In the bottom of the box was a type-written list of names and a bulky sealed legal envelope marked on the outside "Papers in the Farrish case."

"Take Charge of These and Give Them to Miss Louise or Miss Katharine."

"Here, Kent," said Davis, handing me the envelope, "take charge of these and give them to Miss Louise or Miss Katharine. You're entitled to that."

Joyfully I stowed the envelope in my breast pocket, my heart bounding at the thought of the relief the sight of the package would bring to the Farrish family. But as yet the whole affair was a blind puzzle to me and I waited eagerly for further developments.

"Now, Young," said the inspector, "tell me all about your scheme."

"If the damn thieves hadn't been such cowards as to go and kill themselves," said Young with a glow of enthusiasm, "I would have been a millionaire within a year. Read one of the letters and you can see for yourself just how good the scheme was."

Lifting the topmost sheet the inspector read the yellow letter aloud.

Lock Box 17,
Ardway, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1910.

Dear Sir:

I am writing to you in pursuance of my duty as executor of the late Edwin Green, who died here recently, leaving his entire estate amounting to some $550,000 in my hands for what he was pleased to term a "Defaulters' Fund."

I can best explain its purpose by briefly summarizing the founder's life. In his early youth Mr. Green was employed for a short time in a bank in a small city in another state. Becoming involved in speculation he used several hundred dollars of the bank's funds. He had no relatives but a sister, to whom he knew it was useless to apply for aid. As discovery seemed inevitable he was contemplating suicide, seeing nothing but prison and disgrace ahead of him. But an old friend of his father, who entirely by accident learned of his plight, advanced him the money he needed to make good his defalcation, exacting from him a promise that he would help others in similar plight whenever he had opportunity.

His subsequent life was of the highest rectitude. Though he amassed a fortune he never found opportunity to aid any one in a plight similar to the one in which he once found himself. It became almost a mania with him and resulted in his leaving his entire fortune to aid first offenders in turning back into the right path.

I know of no way of reaching the persons he intended to aid. I am sending out this letter to persons employed in banks and positions of trust, hoping that you or others who receive it may know of some man, young or old, who has made the first misstep and is wrongfully using funds belonging to others, but is desirous of making good his peculations. If you should know of any such I will gladly make good his defalcation and endeavor to save him from exposure, disgrace and imprisonment, asking only his word that he will not err again, for Mr. Green, in the deed of trust, expressly specifies that this is the only security to be exacted. I am, sir,

Very truly yours,
HENRY MALCOLM STEWART.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Otter a Wanderer.

Of all the beasts in the world, the otter, that fierce outlaw, is the greatest wanderer. It is as if he were afflicted with a curse that forbids him to be still, that forces him ever to push on—on—on! Rest, as rest, he knows not. Three days will see the end of his longest junction, and the amount of miles he covers in a fortnight would amaze some folks.—Outing.

American Soldiers the Best

World's Records for Marksmanship All His, and He Is Trained to Act on His Own Initiative.

If there is one big, distinguishing trait of the United States regular, it is individuality. In every one of the great foreign military nations, particularly Germany and Japan, battalion and company officers and enlisted men are carefully trained not to think for themselves. They are used as mere chess pieces under the guidance of a master mind. In this country, where our melting pot has yielded an extraordinary self-reliant, cool thinking, intensive initiative product, it is only natural that our soldiers should be trained as are our civilians.

The United States army spends annually on rifle target practice five times the sum spent by any other army of an equal number of men. This applies, too, to our field and coast artillery. As a result, no better marksmen can be found than the American soldier and his cousin, the national guardsman, who is trained along the same lines. Every world's fire control and accuracy record with rifle and big gun is today held by the American soldier.

The United States army is small, in accordance with the wish of the people not to support a large standing military establishment. But what we have is almost 100 per cent. efficient, the splendid nucleus of the big army of regulars, militia and volunteers which we should place in the field if occasion required. It is only in equipment — quartermaster, commissary, medicine and particularly ordnance stores—that our army is lacking.—Leslie's.

GUARDIANS OF ALL

Writer in the Christian Herald Gives Answer to the Question, "Am I My Brother's Keeper?"

WHERE shall we find a training school in the business of being a guardian? On all sides we are beset with teachers of personal efficiency who offer sure systems of self-improvement and for gaining success in the battle of life. The institution or the instructor who best can equip the youth to meet competition, to rise above his fellows, to win victories over his rivals, is sure of eager pupils day and night.

The world is rightly grateful to the successful teacher of personal efficiency; we need more of it in every branch of business and religious work, but we need something else with even greater urgency. We need more earnest attention to the study of relationship and to the business of guarding the interests of others. Individualism must be merged into brotherhood. I am my brother's keeper. If I am faithful to my charge he will advance with me. If he goes down to defeat, or to a life of littleness and ill favor with God and man, it is partly my fault.

"No! I protest!" exclaims the "self-made" man and the man whose days are strenuous with effort to make himself. "I want no guardianship, and I deny that it is my business to play the guardian to any other man. This is an age for forceful, independent personality. Every man must fight his own way and win his own achievements. No one will accept responsibility for me if I fail. I shall have no one to thank but myself if I succeed. I must struggle for every advantage I gain and I shall snatch it when and where I can. The other fellow is doing the same thing." Such is the law of "self-help," a law greatly exalted by many teachers, but a pitiless law, which, when it operates alone, creates a savage individualism, destroys fellowship, forces some men up and many men down, and postpones far into an unknown future the era of "peace on earth, good will to men."

None Entirely Independent.

No one of us is independent of the guardianship of our brothers and sisters. If they are faithful to us we prosper and rejoice. If some one of them forgets his obligation, immediately we suffer.

We are guardians of our brother's reputation as well as of his fortune. Freedom of speech gives us the right to express our own views and to spread our own beliefs. It does not give us the right to destroy our brother's reputation. Why is it that everywhere we find so many men and women who unhesitatingly denounce the integrity and the motives of those whom they do not know, but who they believe must be guilty because they have not submitted incontestible proof to their unknown detractors that they are innocent? Is it more popular to condemn the absent brother or sister than it is to praise? Is it more interesting? Is it pleasanter? Does it satisfy some inward lust for destruction? When our words have stabbed the absent brother or sister through and through and left a reputation bleeding and stricken down, can we go on our way, guiltless and indifferent, saying, with Cain, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

Some Cogent Reason.

I am my brother's keeper, therefore I will make myself strong that I may lend him a hand when he is weak; that I may carry my own burden unfalteringly and lift a part of his when he is weary.

I am my brother's keeper, therefore I will cheer him on the way; I will show him that in storm and darkness I am unafraid, so that he may be emboldened to walk through his own valley of shadow with a brave heart and head erect.

I am my brother's keeper, therefore I will be true and clean in my life, that as his life touches mine he may not be soiled; that he may find in me some example and incentive to keep his own life clean, and his dealings with men honorable and kind.

I am my brother's keeper, therefore I will try to solve the problems of life with a view to his welfare, knowing that in the rightful adjustment of business, and society, and life in its truest expression, my brother's welfare is my own, and mine is his. When perplexing questions must be answered by my voice, or my pen, or my vote, I will seek the answer which means my brother's good, not merely because such answer will mean also my own good, but because he is my brother.

I am my brother's keeper, therefore I want to know more and more about my relationship with him and how to acquit myself as a brother should; because I shall hear, some day, a voice calling to me in the garden: "Son, son, where is thy brother?" and I shall want to answer, "Here, Father, here is my brother, with his hand in mine; we have come home together."

Bearing the Marks.

"I [illegible] the marks of the Lord Jesus."—Gal. 6:17.

The exact marks of Paul will not be likely to be inflicted on us. Fetters, stonings, the lash, and the like will probably not be branded on our bodies. We may have to learn to bear the marks of Christ in circumstances of ease and peace and prosperity. Then what are the marks of Christ when the vessel is sailing over calm and sunlit seas? These: That I obviously belong to him, never afraid to confess his name in joy or pain, in ease or woe, in want or abundance; that I commit my life without reservation to his authority—willing to walk on the sunny height, or "through the valley of the shadow of death;" to keep life or to risk it at his bidding; he is my king and lord, and I am at his disposal; I will march with him in triumph into the city, or watch with him in the agony of Gethsemane as he shall direct; that I will hold on to the way of his commandments in simplicity and unworldliness of life, through "evil report and good report," and will cheerfully bear witness to him.—Rev. Charles Brown.

African Ants.

These insects sometimes set forward in such multitudes that the whole earth seems to be in motion. A corps of them once was seen to attack and cover an elephant quietly feeding in a pasture. In eight hours nothing was to be seen but the skeleton of that enormous animal completely picked. The business was done, and the enemy marched on after fresh prey. Such power have the smallest creatures acting in concert.
